U. S. Will Join Nine-Power Treaty Signatories To 'Quarantine' Nations Threatening World Peace

Davidson Met Murderer by Appointment, Police Believe

Asked Youth 'a Lot of Questions' 3 Weeks Ago at Quantico.

G-Men Will Lend Investigation Aid

Search Now Is Under Way for Death Weapon Near Scene.

A prearranged meeting, either in Washington or near Quantico, Va., led to the murder of Elmer J. Davidson, U. S. Chamber of Commerce research expert, Virginia State police indicated last night.

Convinced Davidson was not riding alone along dark rural roads in a pouring rain "because he liked it," investigators are certain he knew his slayer and met him by appointment Sunday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Andy Brady, owners of the Diner Inn, just north of Dumphries, Va., told State Policeman Maury G. Snead late last night that a man answering Davidson's description had entered their cafe Sunday night at 10 o'clock.

He got out of his big automobile they said, and entered to buy cigarettes.

Called to Companion.

As he was half inside the door, he turned and called to an invisible companion in the car:

"What kind of cigarettes do you want?"

He then came in the store, they said, and dropped three nickels in the automatic vendor. When he got the cigarettes he nervously fumbled in his pocket and pulled out several pennies, offering one of them for a box of matches. He apparently did not notice that a paper of matches had come with his purchase.

Whether the companion who rode with their customer was a man or a woman the Bradys could not say, for they could not see.

At the same time the automobile thought to be Davidson's stopped, a light car pulled in behind it and parked, the Bradys said.

It had District of Columbia tags.

When the first car pulled away into the darkness, the light car followed, the Bradys said.

Evidence that Davidson had recently visited the Stafford County section where his shot and stabbed body was found beneath a tree on lonely Widewater road early Monday was offered police yesterday by 17-year-old Willard Bean, of Triangle, Va.

"Asked Lot of Questions."

As State Police Sergt. E. J. McDermott, in charge of the investigation, conferred with District authorities and searched the slain man's personal effects for possible clews, young Bean identified Davidson as the man who picked him up and "asked him a lot of questions" near the gate of the Marine Reservation at Quantico about three weeks ago.

During his examination of Davidson's effects yesterday, Sergt. McDermott said he found several photographs of marines and sailors, some

Conservatives Lead in Detroit With C. I. O. 2d

A. F. of L. Candidate Runs Third in Mayoralty Primary Vote.

Detroit, Oct. 5 (AP).—Early returns in Detroit's mayoralty primary today put Richard W. Reading, conservative candidate, ahead in a five-cornered race which had been forecast as an easy victory for the C. I. O. in its first venture in city politics.

In returns from 200 of 918 precincts, Reading polled 23,635, John W. Smith, sponsored by the A. F. of L., was third with 13,973, while Patrick H. O'Brien, C. I. O. candidate, who trailed in early returns, was second with 15,835. Clarence J. McLeod and Ralph A. Philbrook, other independents, were far behind.

The primary, enlivened by the opposite positions taken by the rival labor organizations, drew an unusually large number of voters despite a morning rainstorm. City election officials predicted while the tabulation was under way that between 250,000 and 300,000 of the 611,000 registered voters cast ballots.

Principal object of the labor factions was the important post of mayor, a $15,000-a-year job. As head of Detroit's nonpartisan type of government, the mayor is empowered to appoint more than 70 department heads without consulting the council.

Statement of C. I. O. candidate O'Brien that "labor must seize the reins of government in Detroit and every other American city" drew especial fire of some of his opponents.

Unidentified Girl Run Down by Car

A pretty, well-dressed young woman, about 23, was near death in Casualty Hospital last night after having been struck by an automobile at Eleventh street and Massachusetts avenue.

Physicians, who were attempting to identify the victim, said she had a fractured skull. She was described as having brown hair and green eyes, wearing a blue dress and carrying a purse in which were a diamond and sapphire ring and a cross on a gold chain.

Sam Burton, 35, of the 1500 block of B street southwest, alleged driver of the car, was held for investigation.

Estimate Cuts Asked to Avert Budget Deficit

Many Capitol Leaders Are Skeptical as War on Spending Opens.

By Robert C. Albright.

Frank misgivings on Administration hopes for a balanced 1939 budget were expressed yesterday by some Capitol guardians of Treasury purse strings, as a war on excess spending was declared on all fronts.

Urging House appropriation subcommittees to "cut wherever possible," Representative Edward T. Taylor, of Colorado, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, reviewed the budget outlook in Washington yesterday.

"We are going to try to reduce expenditures, but it is impossible for me to predict at this time a real balancing of the budget," Taylor said.

"There are too many things you can't figure on in advance—droughts, floods and other calamities, and even possibility the committee may be overridden by Congress.

Held Just a Hope.

On the other side of the Capitol, Senator Alva B Adams, of Colorado, a Democratic member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said "I am for it," but added at present budget balancing was "just a devout hope."

"I don't see how we can do it without taking the hides off taxpayers," Adams said.

On the revenue side, Representative Fred M. Vinson, foremost House authority on taxation, declined any forecast on balancing prospects "for the present." Vinson is chairman of a special House committee that will Unaware of a surprise birthday party, planned for him by five daughters for Saturday, his seventy-eighth birthday, John Edward Dent, 4027 Thirteenth street northwest, was found shot to death last night in the bathroom of his home.

Police said Dent, a retired railroad employe, apparently had committed suicide because of despondency over his wife's death about a year ago. The couple had been married for nearly 50 years.

Reich, Japan, Italy Scored By President

By Franklyn Waltman.
A Staff Correspondent.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—In perhaps the most momentous utterance of his career, President Roosevelt today suggested that peace-loving nations of the world take concerted action to quarantine international aggressors.

The only interpretation that can be placed on the President's pronouncement is that he would favor application of sanctions, along with other nations, against those countries which are disturbing the peace of the world. Nor is such an interpretation repugnant to those close to the President.

Indeed, Mr. Roosevelt gave an interpolated emphasis to that part of his prepared address after he had questioned the effectiveness of the American neutrality policy. He asserted that violations of treaties and ignoring of humane instincts had created in the world today "a state of international anarchy and instability from which there is no escape through mere isolation or neutrality."

Assails Dictator Powers.

The President assailed Japan, Germany and Italy, without specifically naming them. His criticism of Japan's militarism was particularly severe. He declared "the peace, the freedom and the security of 90 per cent of the population of the world is being jeopardized by the remaining 10 per cent who are threatening a breakdown of all international law and order."

Mr. Roosevelt reiterated his often-expressed determination "to pursue a policy of peace and to adopt every practicable measure to avoid involvement in war" but he warned that "we can not insure ourselves against the disastrous effects of war and the dangers of involvement."

In a speech heard around the world and without doubt seriously discussed by statesmen in every capital, he declared that "most important of all, the will for peace on the part of peace-loving nations must express itself to the end that nations which may be tempted to violate their agreements and the rights of others will desist from such a course."

Positive Peace Endeavors.

"There must be positive endeavors to preserve peace," he grimly said.

Thus Mr. Roosevelt brought to a climax his swing through the Northwest with a speech constituting the most portentous pronouncement he has made in a long time. The address overshadows everything else that has happened on his two-week trip which ends at Hyde Park tomorrow morning. Indeed, it overshadows all domestic political developments of recent months, including the Ku Klux Klan revelations regarding Justice Black.

Woman, Maimed, Routs Bandit By Sinking Teeth Into His Arm

A woman of small stature fought off a powerfully built young colored robber yesterday afternoon, suffering a fractured left wrist when her assailant hurled her to the floor.

The victim, Mrs. Marie Wertheim, 39, of 1250 Owens place northeast, was taken to Garfield Hospital. The attack took place at 700 Columbia road northwest, where she is manager of a branch of the Aristo Cleaners & Dyers chain.

Mrs. Wertheim was alone in the shop at 4:30 when a man entered. She told police he was 22 to 25 years old, about 5 feet 8 inches in height, strongly built and wearing a gray sweater and brown cap.

The man said he came to get a pair of trousers left by his brother, "James." When Mrs. Wertheim asked him to describe the garment he said he would have to consult his brother outside.

Leaving the shop, the man immediately re-entered and tried to close and lock the door. Mrs. Wertheim came from behind the counter and told him to leave the door alone.

The intruder seized her. Thrusting an arm around her neck, he tried to cover her mouth with his hand. Simultaneously he tried to drag her into the rear of the shop.

Biting his right wrist, Mrs. Wertheim fought grimly. Her assailant then hurled her to the floor.

The intruder then saw William H. Wilkerson, of 778 Irving street northwest, passing by. Frightened by Mrs. Wertheim's resistance and the possibility that Wilkerson might sense something wrong, he fled.

Wilkerson assisted Mrs. Wertheim and notified police. Police were hopeful the attacker's wound would serve as a means of identification.

Geneva Body Urges World To Aid China

League Committee Acts Immediately After Roosevelt Speech.

Japanese Invasion Is Called a Violation of Two Treaties.

By the United Press.

Geneva, Oct. 5—Spurred by President Roosevelt's indirect suggestion that aggressor nations be "quarantined," the League of Nations advisory committee on Far Eastern affairs tonight recommended that the nearly three-score nations in the League give direct aid to China.

The President's obvious condemnation of Japan, as well as other aggressor nations, for an "epidemic of world lawlessness" led the advisory group's drafting committee to rewrite an earlier draft which had merely asked that League nations do nothing to weaken China's military resistance.

Want Nine-Power Parley.

The advisory committee's forceful report to the League Assembly included:

1. Condemnation of Japan's "invasion" as a violation of the nine-power and Kellogg-Briand peace treaties.

2. A request that all League states give China whatever aid they can.

3. Recommendation that the Aga Khan, president of the Assembly, convoke an emergency session of the nine-power signatories, including the United States and Japan and other nations with vital interests in the Far East.

4. A request that the Assembly remain in session to deal with the crisis.

The report, which is expected to be approved by the full League Assembly late tonight, asserted bluntly that Japan's invasion of China is an open violation of her pledges under the nine-power pact of February 6, 1922, and the Kellogg-Briand pact outlawing war. The Assembly postponed its vote on the resolution until tomorrow to enable delegates to consult with their governments.

U. S. Man on Committee.

Under the spur of Roosevelt's speech—in effect answering League contentions that nothing could be accomplished because the United States was unwilling to co-operate in the Far East—the League was acting with a speed unparalleled since sanctions were voted against Italy in 1935.

The 23-nation advisory committee includes Leland Harrison, United States Minister to Switzerland, as a non-voting observer. He sat with the drafting sub-committee in the same capacity.

The sub-committee, cheered by the President's forthright stand against treaty violators, added a fifth section to its report recommending that the nearly three-score League states consider immediately how they may go individually to the aid of China. An hour later the full advisory committee gave its approval and sent the report on to the Assembly.

Many observers believed that the United States would be willing to take a leading role in any convocation of the nine-power signatories.

America Finds Her Voice.

(An Editorial)

NOT SINCE the days of Woodrow Wilson has an American President made so strong a plea for effective international co-operation in behalf of peace as was voiced by Mr. Roosevelt in Chicago yesterday. The effects of this speech, coming at the present critical juncture of world affairs, are certain to be momentous.

While mentioning no country and no ruler by name, this declaration of national policy was clearly directed to the three capitals where plans for aggression against other countries either are being directed or are contemplated for the immediate future. To Tokyo, to Rome and to Berlin the President served notice that such aggression is not merely passively resented by the United States, but will be resisted by "positive endeavors."

The timing of the message was perfect. It informs Japan, which recently had the effrontery to ask for American "co-operation" in the rape of China, that the United States will refuse to recognize any gains torn from the Nanking government by military force. It tells Italy, about to throw additional regiments into the Spanish cauldron, that this country is prepared vigorously to oppose such action. It warns Germany, restless and eager to strike against her weaker neighbors, that any move of conquest will be regarded in Washington as an act hostile to us.

The speech ends, for all time it may be hoped, the flabby, vicious, humiliating doctrine that America can see no difference between a ruthless aggressor and the innocent victim of his aggression. It obviously makes the misnamed neutrality policy impossible of application in the hostilities between Japan and China. It permits the American people again to take pride in their country as one which is at last willing to take a stand on principle. And thereby the President has made tangible contribution to a peace which has some meaning, which is something more than mere temporary immunity from spreading warfare.

* * * *

WITH INCONTESTABLE logic Mr. Roosevelt showed yesterday that it can only be a matter of time, as the trend is running, before this country will be engulfed by the spread of "the present reign of terror and international lawlessness."

The invasion of Manchuria by Japan encouraged the conquest of Ethiopia by Italy. The success of that attack stimulated Italian and German intervention in Spain. Absence of resistance there prompted Japan, gorged though she is with her Manchurian spoils, to strike at the heart of China.

Within six short years this organized vandalism has spread from Asia to Africa to Europe and now back to Asia again. There is no reason why next year the triumphant aggressors should not decide to strike in a territory where we could not even pretend to be disinterested.

"Let no one imagine that America will escape," said President Roosevelt, out of the abundant knowledge available to him, in his speech at Chicago yesterday. And every American with a mind and heart bigger than those of a rabbit knows that he spoke the truth.

This prairie fire of lawless aggression, said Mr. Roosevelt, "is definitely of universal concern." And the only way to prevent its spread to the New World is for the peace-loving nations to "work together," to "make a concerted effort" in behalf of civilization, to "join in a quarantine" of that small minority of countries which today "are threatening a breakdown of all international order and law."

The words are strong, as they should be to match the terrible situation against which they are directed. Use of the word "quarantine" can certainly be regarded as a call to the American public to boycott Japanese goods. It may be interpreted as the first move toward the application of economic sanctions to so clearly defined an aggressor as is Japan in China, or Italy in Spain. But while these positive defensive measures are now definitely up for national consideration, that fact in itself should make it unnecessary to invoke them.

* * * *

AGGRESSIVE ACTION, with its concomitants of pirate submarines and bomb-shattered noncombatants, has swept on with the speed of fire largely because this great country, betraying its traditions, has sought to sabotage the responsibility which is a concomitant of power, has even told the dictators that they can count on a passivity which is in fact a tacit alliance with their aims.

When the President of the United States serves notice that this ignoble era is over, when he warns his fellow-citizens that as the tide sets our turn will come next, a different attitude on the part of the modern vandals can be expected. The bully is always a bully until his bluff is called. And warning that this bluff must be called was served by Mr. Roosevelt in Chicago yesterday.

* * * *

THIS SPEECH, coming at the psychological moment, may well foreshadow a turning point in world history. The forces now fighting intolerable aggression, whether in the case of the Chinese at Shanghai or the Spaniards defending Madrid, are neither cowards nor weaklings. They are prepared to carry on the fight for human decency unaided. But with the assurance that the United States has not forgotten all moral standards in its ostrich hunt for security the strength of their resistance will be redoubled.

The Chinese government knows now that the United States means business in seeing that the Nine-Power Treaty is upheld. The Valencia government knows now that this country will never recognize the Italo-German puppet regime of Gen. Franco. President Roosevelt has only to make explicit the assurances implicit in yesterday's speech, and the turn toward peace will, for the first time since 1931, become apparent.

League's Bid For Positive Action Will Be Accepted

Parley May Be Concerned Chiefly With Invasion of China.

But War in Spain May Be on Agenda

New American Policy Involves Ending of 'Isolation.'

The Foreign Crisis.

The League of Nations advisory committee recommended that all League members give direct aid to China, and moved to invite a special session of the nine-power treaty signatories, including the United States and Japan. Immediate approval by the League Assembly, and immediate acceptance of the invitation by the United States was expected.

Stocks slumped sharply and many issues dropped to new lows for 1937 in a wave of selling attributed to world conditions indicated in the President's address. —Page 23.

U. S. to Attend Parley.

The United States will accept at once an invitation to join other signers of the Nine-Power Treaty in constructive, positive action against aggressor nations in an effort to maintain world peace, The Post was informed today.

Such an invitation was expected momentarily. It will follow approval by the League of Nations Assembly of a report made to a committee of that body Tuesday which, among other things, called for an emergency conference of the signatories.

The report was redrafted in stronger terms Tuesday within an hour after delivery of President Roosevelt's Chicago address. That address suggested an international "quarantine" against nations to blame for "an epidemic of world lawlessness." An American "observer" was a member of the drafting committee.

Acceptance of the report by the League sub-committee and by the League council quickly followed its submission. Acceptance by the entire League Assembly was expected last night or today.

Means End of Isolation.

The invitation, freely predicted in Geneva and in London, if accepted, would assure abandonment by the United States of its so-called isolationist policy in effect since the days of the Wilson Administration.

Action might be confined, The Post's informant said, to the immediate objectives of the 1922 Nine-Power Treaty signed first by the United States, then by Great Britain, China, Japan, Belgium, France, Italy, the Netherlands and Portugal.

Those objectives are guarantees

A. F. L. Told Changing Wagner Act Would Hurt Labor

Plant Unions Sure to Profit, Says Madden

Roosevelt Greeting Hints Peace Between Factions Is Desired.

By the Associated Press.

Denver, Oct. 5.—J. Warren Madden, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, advised the American Federation of Labor today against trying to fight the C. I. O. by amending the Wagner labor disputes act.

The company union, Madden told the federation convention, would be the winner of any such battle.

Lack of any enthusiastic applause clearly indicated the federation's coolness toward the board, which leaders have accused of partiality to C. I. O.

President Roosevelt sent his greetings and some leaders professed to see in the message a hint that the President felt the country would be better off if the A. F. of L.-C. I. O. war were ended.

The message, addressed to President William Green, said in part:

"Please extend my hearty greetings to the delegates to this American Federation of Labor convention and my hope that your sessions will be productive of constructive plans for the improvement of conditions and for co-operation to this end of workers, management and the public.

"Continued co-operation among workers and management will serve to consolidate these substantial gains and enable us to go on to greater prosperity and to better standards of living."

Madden told the convention that labor's civil war had added to the volume of the board's work.

"With the division in the labor movement and with competition between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. for the right to represent the workers in the same plant, the employer, not unnaturally, may have a preference for one of the competing unions," he said.

"The law forbids him to give effect to that preference by coercing his employes to join the preferred union or not to join the other union."

Plant Taken Over By Workers Signs Union Agreement

Two weeks ago 45 employes, members of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, struck for higher wages. Countered Owner L. G. Griffith:

"All right. I'm through. You run it."

The strikers took him up. Three of them formed a new $25,000 corporation, hired Griffith as sales manager. They signed a bargaining agreement with the union, and everybody went back to work.

Fagg Will Retain Post Here for Year

Commerce Department officials said yesterday that Fred D. Fagg, jr., director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, will remain at his post possibly for another year despite his appointment as dean of the School of Commerce at Northwestern University.

Fagg will preside at the conference Thursday to discuss regulations of Washington Airport. Representatives of the bureau, the Virginia State corporation commission, Washington Airport, the three airlines which use the field and the Airline Pilots' Association will be present.

C. E. Arnott Called 'Brains' in Oil Plot

Madison, Wis., Oct. 5 (AP).—Federal counsel charged today that Charles E. Arnott, vice president of Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., was the "master mind" behind a conspiracy to extract hundreds of millions of dollars from the public through noncompetitive gasoline prices in the Middle West.

Attorney W. P. Crawford charged that 23 major firms bought up gasoline of independent refineries and created a monopoly that enabled them to maintain artificially high prices in ten States.

War Prevention Council Opens Program Today

Speaking on "What Should Be the Objectives of United States Policy in the Far East," William W. Lockwood, jr., of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, will address the initial conference of the annual session of the National Council for Prevention of War at the Hotel Washington this morning.

The program, which will be devoted today to American neutrality and the Far East crisis, is to be opened by Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the national council. Other speakers will include J. Nevin Sayre, secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation; J. Max Weis, publicity director of World Peaceways, and Mrs. Florence Brewer Boeckel, of the National Council for Prevention of War.

Charles Rich, Head of Conduit Road Citizens, Wants U. S. to Pay Bigger Share of D. C. Costs

CHARLES E. S. RICH.

By Christine Sadler.

Run through the first minutes of the Conduit Road Citizens Association and you will learn that it rained in Washington on the night of Friday, October 2, 1916; but that Conduit road residents were too wrought up to care. Automobiles were increasing so rapidly that something had to be done to get sidewalks out their way. The middle of the road was no longer safe for pedestrians.

The citizens met in St. David's Parish Hall, and organized. They got their sidewalks, all right; but they have continued to meet every month just the same. Their meetings now are held in the Palisades Park field house, which is one of their latest community achievements.

Along with plenty of paved streets and walks and the new Palisades Park development, they list the following accomplishments as proof of continued activity down through the years:

1. High water pressure. The anniversary folder which listed this declares that a lot of people have no idea how difficult it used to be to get bathtubs filled in the Conduit road area.

2. Gas. "This was an up-hill fight," the folder states, "but one of our best achievements."

3. Storm sewers. "This doesn't show on the surface, but has stopped much damage to our lawns, cellars and streets."

4. Defeated establishment of orphans' and charity home in the section and got the ground originally set aside for it converted into a public park—now Palisades Field.

Rich Begins Second Term.

One of the main things the association wants this year is a new or much-repaired library building. When the Key School was secured, Conduit road citizens also got a branch library, which was located in the building the school quit using. Until 1935 the library answered purposes of the community very well, and even served Georgetown residents. Today, however, something needs to be done about better housing for it.

Beginning his second term as president of the Conduit road group is Charles E. S. Rich, who came to Washington 19 years ago from Worcester, Mass., and has been chief of finance in the War Department offices since 1922.

He became interested in citizenship work in Washington eight years ago, when he bought his first home in the District and began to pay taxes. The old saying about "taxation without representation" began to have a personal meaning to him then, and he started joining in the talk about suffrage for Washington.

If it had not been for the citizens' associations, permanent District residents would lack many more improvements than they do, in the opinion of Mr. Rich. "We would never have got anything in any neighborhood then unless some Congressman happened to live there," he said.

Mr. Rich is a charter member of the new District of Columbia Association, and the executive committee of the Conduit road group has voted to recommend affiliation with that body.

Although he is strictly opposed to bond issues for the District, he believes Washington residents "do not question paying for the improvements they request." They do object to paying what they consider is more than their share of the District government and to having the Federal Government continually cutting down its portion, he believes.

"I feel that every civic group should get behind the commissioners and try to get a more equitable share of expenses from the Government."

Mr. Rich was educated as a musician and at one time taught piano and played a church organ. When he first came to Washington he sang in the First Congregational Church choir. Music still is his hobby, and he teaches it to his five children. For recreation and a touch with the out of doors, he turns to a small rose garden.

He is a delegate to the Federation of Citizens' Associations this year, and has ambitions to increase the Conduit road memberships. His group takes in men and women on an equal basis and before the winter is over expects to have more than 500 paid up members.

Friday: The subject of the "Working for Washington" series will be M. M. McLean, president of the Brookland Citizens' Association.

G.O.P. National Committee to Meet on Nov. 5

Hamilton Moves for Showdown on Convention Proposal.

An early showdown on Republican proposals for a mid-term party convention next spring was assured yesterday, when John H. Hamilton, Republican National Committee chairman, called the Republican National Committee to meet in Chicago November 5.

In his letter to committeemen, Hamilton called attention to proposals for the off-year party conference, but said he had "not attempted to prepare a formal agenda."

The call, already tentatively scheduled, followed a series of informal conferences by party leaders in the West, and aggreement between former President Herbert Hoover and Col. Frank Knox to propose to the committee that a group of "distinguished Republicans" draft "fundamental principles" to be submitted to the proposed conference.

Former Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas, had nothing to add yesterday to the statement of Former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois that all were "in agreement on every essential problem," the Associated Press said. Landon confefred with Knox in Chicago Monday and with Hoover and Lowden Sunday.

The Hamilton letter to committeemen yesterday called attention to a new committee proxy rule adopted at the last meeting of the national committee, last December 17.

Aimed at assuring representation of all localities, the resolution prohibited committee use of proxies except by representatives of the State or territory which the maker of the proxy represents.

Neighbors Fight Making Walsh Mansion a Hotel

Zone Change to Be Fought by Dupont Circle Citizens Today.

Plans for remodeling the old Walsh mansion at 2020 Massachusetts avenue are expected to be disclosed today when trustees of the estate, the American Security & Trust Co., ask authority to rezone the property.

The Walsh case is one of 36 applications on the docket of the District Zoning Commission. Seven additional cases involve alley property. The hearing will open at 10 a. m.

Leading the opposition to the Walsh property rezoning from residential to first commercial is the Dupont Circle Citizens Association.

Woodson P. Houghton, acting president, said that the association had adopted resolutions opposing the petition and urging the commission to keep the area residential.

Until recently the Walsh home was used for commercial purposes by the Resettlement Administration in violation of District zoning regulations. Because the RA was a Federal agency, however, no attempt was made to enforce the law.

An official of the zoning commission said yesterday that he has no knowledge of what trustees plan to do with the Walsh property, but had assumed that it was to be converted to business uses.

Reports reaching the Dupont Citizens Association have indicated that a hotel or apartment house is planned.

Episcopal Conference Expected to Retain Stern Rules on Divorce

Action Held Up On Remarriage Ban Until 1940

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, Oct. 5.—Modification of the stern and traditional attitude of the Protestant Episcopal Church toward remarriage of divorced members appeared destined tonight for another 3-year delay.

Informed churchmen said on the eve of their fifty-second triennial general convention that action on a recommendation of the church joint commission on marriage and divorce likely would be deferred for further study and possible discussion at the Lambeth Conference in London in 1940.

The commission proposed that bishops be empowered to decide whether a divorced communicant should be allowed to remarry.

A church canon, taken from the law of the parent Church of England, permits only the remarriage of the innocent party in a divorce for adultery.

The convention is expected to give its attention early to two proposals for eliminating the overlapping of duties caused by dual leadership.

One group, representing those who like the elaborate "high church" ritual, advocates creating the position of primate, comparable to the Archbishop of Canterbury in the Church of England. A second, embracing "low church" advocates of the comparatively simple ritual, proposes decentralization of the national council's authority in mission work and its distribution among the presidents of the eight church provinces in this country.

The church's national council decided to launch an appeal for a China relief fund of $300,000 after hearing that the Sino-Japanese conflict was causing many emergency expenses in the foreign missions department.

Twice Suspended, Policeman Puzzles Over Bureau Feud

Two weeks ago Matthews was suspended when a grand larceny charge was lodged against him following thefts from St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Police Court Judge Hobart Newman refused to hold Matthews for the grand jury, and he was reinstated. But the grand jury indicted him anyhow. So yesterday Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, executive officer of the department, suspended him again.

Two other men, Thad P. Strader and John E. Robey, hospital employes, were held for the grand jury in conection with the thefts.

Robinson's Widow Supports Miller

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 5 (AP).—Mrs. Joseph T. Robinson, widow of the former majority leader in the Senate, gave public indorsement today to the candidacy of Congressman John E. Miller, independent Democrat, seeking election to Robinson's unexpired term.

SYDNEY SHOSTECK. SAMUEL LEVINGER.

Two American youths who were the victims of snipers' bullets while fighting with loyalist forces near Belchite. Young Shosteck left this city for a vacation in Paris and volunteered for service with the Lincoln brigade. Levinger, son of a Columbus, Ohio, rabbi, also lost his life in the same battle.

D.C. Volunteer and Rabbi's Son Die for Spain in Aragon Drive

Sidney Shosteck, 1121 Orren Street, Fell After Four-Day Victorious Drive on Belchite; Member of Lincoln Battalion.

Because he believed "Spain should be the tomb of fascism," a 23-year-old Washington volunteer in the loyalist army today lies buried in a lonely battlefield.

The youth, Sidney Shosteck, of 1121 Orren street northeast, was killed in action September 6 amid the ruins of Belchite. Word of his death was contained in a letter just received by the Friends of the Abraham Lincoln Battalion.

Although comrades buried him with honors and commissioned him posthumously a first lieutenant, they could not ease the anguish of his Washington mother.

"It's hard on mothers," she said brokenly . . . "this coming and this going."

"He was a brave boy. I am proud he died for a good cause."

Seeking to wipe out the rebel threat to the vital Madrid-Valencia highway and to drive a wedge between Teruel and Zaragoza, the loyalists opened a terrific drive September 1 on the strategic town of Belchite, the letter said.

Fell in Victorious Attack.

Veterans of the Madrid front, supported by a fleet of Russian tanks, opened up the offensive. Four days the battle raged. On the fifth day, the rebel defense crumbled and the loyalist army smashed its way through the last smouldering stronghold of the town.

It was then that Shosteck fell victim of a sniper.

Shosteck lived here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Saul Shosteck. A native of Newark, N. J., he attended Eastern High School, then worked with his father as a painter and paperhanger. Last May he left home, telling his mother he was going to vacation in Paris. She did not learn of his enlistment until several weeks later.

His adventures began May 30, when, as a passenger on the ill-fated liner Ciudad de Barcelona, he saw a pirate submarine appear off Malgrat, 37 miles northeast of the Catalonian capital. The liner was bound from Marseilles, France, to Barcelona.

The sub unloosed two torpedoes. Both found their mark and the merchant vessel sank. Three, including Sidney, swam 1½ miles toward the Spanish coast before they were rescued by loyalist escort seaplanes. In a letter to his mother, Sidney said he believed they were the only three rescued.

Fought on Aragon Front.

On his arrival in Spain he joined the Abraham Lincoln Battalion and took part in major engagements on the Aragon front until the time of his death.

Shosteck was well known in Washington as an unionist. He was for a time president of the Teamsters Union Local, A. F. of L., and a delegate to the Central Labor Union.

He was a brother of Robert Shosteck, former hiking columnist for The Washington Post, now a forest ranger in Washington State. He also is survived by a sister, Mrs. Sylvia Lewis, of this city.

Friends of the Abraham Lincoln Battalion here are arranging for a mass memorial meeting October 17 at 8 p. m., in the Washington Hotel.

Meanwhile, from Columbus, Ohio, came word that Samuel Levinger, 20, the son of a rabbi there, had been killed in the same battle as Shosteck.

D. C. to Use Part Of Court Building

A space committee was appointed to examine the $1,500,000 building due to be opened in January, to ascertain whether offices could be provided for several scattered municipal agencies.

The commissioners were successful at the last session in getting jurisdiction by means of a rider slipped into the supply bill.

The agencies which probably will be assigned to the third floor are the refuse division, the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets, and the board of revocation and review of operators' permits.

Dahl Is Certain Court Decreed Death Verdict

Sealed Decision Is Sent to Franco; Judges Receive Wife's Prayer.

By the United Press.

Salamanca, Spain, Oct. 5.—Six officers of a Spanish insurgent court-martial late tonight reached a verdict which may send Harold E. Dahl, 28-year-old aviator from Champaign, Ill., to his death before a firing squad.

The verdict, which will not be announced until Thursday, was sent in a sealed envelope to Generalissimo Francisco Franco's high judicial authorities and to the general command of Salamanca Province.

If the verdict is "death" it must be placed before Franco, who once before saved the young American flier from a firing squad after a tearful appeal from Dahl's pretty bride. Many believed Franco would commute any death sentence.

Certain of Death Verdict.

Dahl said he was certain the verdict doomed him to die.

The court-martial, he said, seemed "very fair."

During the testimony the prosecutor, Capt. Juan Espinosa, who demanded the death penalty, and Dahl's attorney both paid tribute to the United States' policy of neutrality in the Spanish war.

Dahl sat without flinching when the death demand was made.

His last act in his own defense was to place before the military judges a telegram from his pretty bride of eight months, Edithe Rodgers Dahl, who waited across the frontier on the French Riviera.

"With all my heart, good luck," said the telegram.

Dahl Denies Communism.

Dahl's testimony was brief—that he came to Spain under the illusion that he was to be a technical adviser, but was forced by the loyalists to fight and kill.

"I am not a Communist," he added.

His attorney stressed that Dahl has been a model husband, writing almost daily to his wife from his whitewashed prison cell.

It appeared that Dahl and his lawyer believed that, if the court-martial found the young American guilty and condemned him to death, Mrs. Dahl might influence Generalissimo Franco to spare his life as she did once before.

Lincoln Statue Again Bereft Of Its Fingers

Question of Raising Effigy at Court House Discussed.

Another vandal scandal involving the statue of Abraham Lincoln which stands in front of the District Courthouse elicited recommendation in some quarters yesterday that the much-abused marble effigy be restored to its old position three stories above the sidewalk.

Sole target of the vandals are the fingers on the Emancipator's right hand. As fast as they are replaced they are broken off again. Right now the digits are missing.

The statue, carved in marble by Lott Flannery, of Washington, is believed to the first national Lincoln memorial in the country. Washingtonians raised $25,000 for it, beginning soon after his assassination, and the statue was dedicated on April 15, 1868.

From that time until the courthuse was reconstructed in 1919-20, the life-sized likeness surmounted a tall pedestal which stood near the curb. Alterations of the building resulted in the statue's being transferred to a low pedestal.

Though return of the statue to a high pedestal was held remote, despite the fact that Flannery designed it to stand in a towering position, officials held it to be quite possible that the right hand may be recarved so as to close it.

D. C. Heads Warn Against Tax Delay

District officials warned business and professional men against waiting too long to file their business privilege tax returns or to obtain licenses.

Although the time has been extended until October 16, they said that the size of the staff will prevent employes from answering more than a limited number of inquiries in the last few days of next week.

Up to yesterday 6,000 returns had been submitted out of an anticipated 18,000. A 10 per cent penalty is mandatory for failure to file returns within the specified period.

President Faces Barrage of Black-Klan Questions at Hyde Park

Conference Set After Luncheon With Cardinal

A Staff Correspondent.

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 5.—Warmly greeted and entertained at luncheon today by one of the four American princes of the Catholic Church, President Roosevelt tomorrow in a press conference at his Hyde Park home will face a barrage of questions regarding the admitted Ku Klux Klan affilitaions of Senator Hugo Black.

The press conference was arranged shortly before the Presidential party left Chicago for Hyde Park, chiefly at the request of newspapermen who wanted to ask questions about Justice Black—and have not had an opportunity to do so for more than two weeks. Whatever the President says on that subject tomorrow is expected to be the last word on it from him.

Some observers, however, believed President Roosevelt's visit today to George Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago, at the latter's request, was an action which spoke louder than words in the Black affair. Surely, the news pictures taken of the President and Cardinal Mundelein beaming on each other, as political matter, are worth the proverbial 10,000 words of value which a Greek philosopher attributed to a picture.

Cancelled Engagement.

The two have been close friends for many years. Cardinal Mundelein last week invited the President to lunch with him. The President quickly accepted, cancelling a previous luncheon engagement with Mayor Edward J. Kelley.

This luncheon has been held to have great political significance because it came on the heels of Black's radio admission that he was a member of the Ku Klux Klan, although he denied present membership in the hooded order and avowed his devotion to religious and racial tolerance.

Nothing happened today that would confirm the speculation that Cardinal Mundelein invited Mr. Roosevelt at this time to demonstrate that one leader of the Catholic Church does not hold the Black appointment against him. Yet nothing happened to deny or upset that speculation. No statements of any kind were issued.

Greeted at Door by Prelate.

The President drove to the archepiscopal residence on the edge of Lincoln Park immediately after his momentous peace speech. Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, auxiliary bishop of Chicago joined Mr. Roosevelt at the end of the speech and rode with him and James Roosevelt to the Cardinal's home.

Cardinal Mundelein, in a black cassock under red ferriola, greeted the President warmly at the front door of the archepiscopal residence, in view of a crowd of several thousand, who cheered.

He led the President into the reception or "throne room." There minutes.

They sat and chatted for a few

Newspaper photographers were then admitted for five minutes. Cardinal Mundelein and President Roosevelt sat on large arm chairs, facing each other. Behind them was the raised dais on which the Cardinal's vacant "throne chair" stood. Over them, under a richly embroidered canopy was a large picture of Pope Pius XI.

Closeted Over Hour.

A few minutes later, the cardinal offered his arm to the President and led the latter into his dining room. The President and the cardinal lunched together, remaining closeted for more than an hour. What they discussed was not revealed. None, but the two, knows whether Justice Black's name was mentioned.

In the eyes o. some Democratic leaders, who had become disturbed over the Black appointment, the meeting of President and cardinal absolved the former of any blame in connection with the Alabaman's elevation to the Supreme Court.

It was reported the newspapermen would be permitted to see the cardinal and the President together and special passes for entry into the archepiscopal residence for the purpose were issued to local reporters. But that meeting did not take place. White House Secretary Marvin McIntyre, it was reported, vetoed that part of the program.

Bishop Sheil entertained James Roosevelt, the President's son at luncheon for two. Other clergymen, who had been presented to the President, were entertained at a third luncheon within the residence.

A buffet luncheon was served in a gaily decorated basement for newspapermen and photographers and secret service men. Bishop Sheil came down but only to say that the cardinal sent word he was happy to have them as his guests. McIntyre had luncheon with them in the basement.

Britain Punishes Holy Land Paper For Racial Article

Jerusalem, Oct. 5 (AP).—British officials tonight suspended publication for two days of Davar, organ of the Jewish Labor Federation and largest Hebrew daily, and issued warnings against publication elsewhere of any matter likely to touch off again the racial animosity.

Informed quarters predicted a conference might be arranged to end strife between Palestine's Jews and Arabs.

Polish Schools Isolate Jews.

Warsaw, Oct. 5 (AP).—"Ghetto seats" for Jewish students were officially established today by the rectors of all Polish universities. Seats in classrooms, laboratories, libraries and elsewhere in the schools must be marked with a distinguishing letter to signify whether they are to be occupied by Jew or non-Jew.

President Asks For Isolation Of Agressors

Condemns Effort to Break Down International Law and Order.

Mr. Roosevelt lunched with George Cardinal Mundelein. Coming on the heels of the Black revelation, that was regarded as a significant event. But after the President's speech it was only of secondary importance.

Dismisses Dedication.

The occasion for the speech was the dedication of the recently completed—with PWA funds—Outer Link Bridge over the mouth of the Chicago River facilitating traffic between North and South Chicago. But the President left to Secretary Ickes and Mayor Edward J. Kelly eulogies of the completion of that project. He dismissed the dedicatory ceremony with one sentence and immediately plunged into his speech on international affairs.

Although Mr. Roosevelt was wildly cheered and was showered with a snowstorm of confetti as he was driven through Chicago, his audience of several thousand at the bridge dedication appeared as sober and grave as he. They interrupted with applause only four times until the end was reached and then they gave the President an ovation. Not only did they applaud his references to keeping the country out of war but they also applauded the sentence which was interpreted as meaning Mr. Roosevelt was favorable to application of sanctions against aggressor nations.

Perhaps applause came on that sentence, keynote of the speech, because Mr. Roosevelt marked it out for his audience—and for the country and world as well.

"And Mark This Well."

"It seems to be unfortunately true that the epidemic of world lawlessness is spreading," the President read. Then he paused, looked up and interpolated:

"And mark this well."

Then he went on with his address. Speeches have been made before by American officials calling for an end to international anarchy and preservation of world peace and yet this country has been unwilling to take any positive or overt action in that direction. In the last few years the emphasis has been on isolation and neutrality.

But the whole tone of Mr. Roosevelt's speech was that of positive action, in concert with other nations, even though he did not specify any particular undertaking, except in the "quarantine"-veiled reference to sanctions.

In stronger language than he ever has used on this subject before, the President, after reciting the horrors of war as described by James Hilton in "Lost Horizon," asserted that "if those things come to pass in other parts of the world, let no one imagine that America will escape, that America may expect mercy, that this Western Hemisphere will not be attacked."

Urges Concerted Effort.

It was then that the President became positive in his declarations, asserting that if days of war are not to come to pass, "the peace-loving nations must make a concerted effort to uphold laws and principles on which alone peace can rest secure" and he repeated that "peace-loving nations must make a concerted effort in opposition" to treaty violations and to those who ignore humane instincts.

He again asserted "there must be a return" to a belief in the pledged word and "there must be a recognition of the fact that national morality is as vital as private morality." Then he cited the impossibility of any nation isolating itself from economic and political upheavals in the rest of the wrold.

Again and again the President used such phrases as "the situation is definitely of universal concern;" "the moral consciousness of the world must recognize the importance of removing injustices and well-founded grievances but at the same time it must be aroused to the cardinal necessity of honoring sanctity of treaties . . . and of putting an end to acts of international aggression," and such further phrases as "the principles of the Prince of Peace must be restored" and "shattered trust between nations must be revived."

Chinese Crush Raiding Party Storming Shanghai Station

Bayonets Stop Japanese and 50 Surrender

Tokyo Warships, Bombers Supply Heavy Barrage for Vain Attack.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, (Wednesday), Oct. 6.—A Japanese raiding party was overwhelmed by Chinese today when it tried to break a nine-day deadlock by penetrating the shattered North Station area.

Behind a screen of artillery and aerial fire, the raiders hurled themselves gainst the Chinese entrenchments just north of the International Settlement, on the edge of Chapei.

Machine gun and rifle fire met the Japanese soldiers, but did not halt them. Foreign troops, from their barricades in the International Settlement, saw the bayonet-wielding Chinese overpower the Japanese by sheer numbers. More than 50 Japanese were captured.

U. S. Gunboat in Peril.

Japanese warships, anchored in the Whangpoo River, and bombing squadrons savagely blasted the entire Chapei sector beyond the range of the raiders.

Japanese seaplanes imperiled the United States gunboat Guam, anchored in the Yangtze River at Wuhu, 55 miles southeast of Nanking. The planes roared over the ship and bombed a nearby Chinese air base.

Reports from Canton, great port of South China, told of a Japanese air attack which the city's defenders drove off with heavy antiaircraft fire.

Conflicting Sino-Japanese reports described a bloody battle in Shantung Province, North China, around the important city of Tehchow. The Japanese said they had routed the Chinese troops and were advancing toward Tsinanfu, provincial capital. Chinese said the battle still raged at Tehchow with the outcome in doubt.

The legions of Gen. Han Fu-chu, Shantung warlord, streamed north from Tsinanfu to meet the Japanese invaders.

Chunhsien Fall Reported.

The Domei (Japanese) News Agency reported that the fast-moving Japanese column in Shansi Province had captured the city of Chunhsien on the way to Taiyuanfu, capital of the province, after a desperate battle with 10,000 Chinese Communist soldiers.

The repulse of the Japanese raiding party in Shanghai brought a climax to an earlier fircе encounter that saw the two armies locked in almost hand-to-hand combat almost all day yesterday. The Japanese also failed then to budge the city's defenders from their maze of miniature forts.

The battle developed into a test between Japan's air bombers and China's strongly entrenched machine gunners, both scoring heavily but indecisively before the bitter fighting stopped at nightfall.

Japanese air bombs, bursting 40 yards away across the narrow Soochow Creek, drove United States Marines temporarily from their positions on the northern edge of the International Settlement.

Shrapnel Sprays Post.

Brig. Gen. John C. Beaumont ordered the Marines out of the line of fire when shrapnel from 15 Japanese bombs, dropped on one of China's largest flour mills, sprayed their outposts. They returned to the barricades two hours later.

The Japanese, asserting they have won unchallenged supremacy in the air, struck from the skies here, at Nanking and at Taiyuanfu.

Chinese anti-aircraft fire and pursuit planes chased a Japanese squadron from Nanking, China's capital, after the fleet of six planes had dropped a dozen bombs. A Chinese airdrome was said to have been demolished and five planes destroyed at Taiyuanfu.

Theater Is Battlefield.

Only 10 yards separated the enemies at many points on the Chinese line that radiated—through narrow alleys barricaded with sandbagged baby forts and barbed wire—from the Tumble Inn cafe, once a notorious underworld rendezvous.

Using the Tumble Inn as a fortress, the Chinese charged shortly after noon, trapping the Japanese in a deadly cross-fire of machine guns and hand grenades. Snipers caught them from machine-gun nests in every small house in the area.

Roosevelt's Chicago Address

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—The text of President Roosevelt's address here today follows:

I am glad to come once again to Chicago and especially, to have the opportunity of taking part in the dedication of this important project of civic betterment.

On my trip across the continent and back I have been shown many evidences of the result of common sense co-operation between municipalities and the Federal Government, and I have been greeted by tens of thousands of Americans who have told me in every look and word that their material and spiritual well-being has made great strides forward in the past few years.

And yet, as I have seen with my own eyes, the prosperous farms, the thriving factories and the busy railroads—as I have seen the happiness and security and peace which covers our wide land, almost inevitably I have been compelled to contrast our peace with very different scenes being enacted in other parts of the world.

Must Think of Future.

It is because the people of the United States under modern conditions must, for the sake of their own future, give thought to the rest of the world, that I, as the responsible executive head of the Nation, have chosen this great inland city and this gala occasion to speak to you on a subject of definite national importance.

The political situation in the world, which of late has been growing progressively worse, is such as to cause grave concern and anxiety to all the peoples and nations who wish to live in peace and amity with their neighbors.

Some nine years ago the hopes of mankind for a continuing era of international peace were raised to great heights when more than 60 nations solemnly pledged themselves not to resort to arms in furtherance of their national aims and policies. The high aspirations expressed in the Briand-Kellogg peace pact and the hopes for peace thus raised have of late given way to a haunting fear of calamity. The present reign of terror and international lawlessness began a few years ago.

It began through unjustified interference in the internal affairs of other nations or the invasion of alien territory in violations of treaties, and has now reached a stage where the very foundations of civilization are seriously threatened. The landmarks and traditions which have marked the progress of civilization towards a condition of law, order and justice are being wiped away.

Without a declaration of war and without warning or justification of any kind civilians, including women and children, are being ruthlessly murdered with bombs from the air. In times of so-called peace ships are being attacked and sunk by submarines without cause or notice. Nations are fomenting and taking sides in civil warfare in nations that have never done them any harm. Nations claiming freedom for themselves deny it to others.

Innocent peoples and nations are being cruelly sacrificed to a greed for power and supremacy which is devoid of all sense of justice and humane consideration.

Says U. S. Will Not Escape.

To paraphrase a recent author "perhaps we foresee a time when men, exultant in the technique of homicide, will rage so hotly over the world that every precious thing will be in danger, every book and picture and harmony, every treasure garnered through two millenniums, the small, the delicate, the defenseless—all will be lost or wrecked or utterly destroyed."

If those things come to pass in other parts of the world, let no one imagine that America will escape, that it may expect mercy, that this Western Hemisphere will not be attacked and that it will continue tranquilly and peacefully to carry on the ethics and the arts of civilization.

If those days come "there will be no safety by arms, no help from authority, no answer in science. The storm will rage till every flower of culture is trampled and all human beings are leveled in a vast chaos."

If those days are not to come to pass—if we are to have a world in which we can breathe freely and live in amity without fear—the peace-loving nations must make a concerted effort to uphold laws and principles on which alone peace can rest secure.

The peace-loving nations must make a concerted effort in opposition to those violations of treaties and those ignorings of humane instincts which today are creating a state of international anarchy and instability from which there is no escape through mere isolation or neutrality.

Those who cherish their freedom and recognize and respect the equal right of their neighbors to be free and live in peace must work together for the triumph of law and moral principles in order that peace, justice and confidence may prevail in the world. There must be a return to a belief in the pledged word, in the value of a signed treaty. There must be recognition of the fact that national morality is as vital as private morality.

A bishop wrote me the other day: "It seems to me that something greatly needs to be said in behalf of ordinary humanity against the present practice of carrying the horrors of war to helpless civilians, especially women and children. It may be that such a protest might be regarded by many, who claim to be realists, as futile, but may it not be that the heart of mankind is so filled with horror at the present needless suffering that that force could be mobilized in sufficient volume to lessen such cruelty in the days ahead. Even though it may take 20 years, which God forbid, for civilization to make effective its corporate protest against this barbarism, surely strong voices may hasten the day.

There is a solidarity and interdependence about the modern world, both technically and morally, which makes it impossible for any nation completely to isolate itself from economic and political upheavals in the rest of the world, especially when such upheavals appear to be spreading and not declining. There can be no stability or peace either within nations or between nations except under laws and moral standards adhered to by all. International anarchy destroys every foundation for peace. It jeopardizes either the immediate or the future security of every nation large or small. It is, therefore, a matter of vital interest and concern to the people of the United States that the sanctity of international treaties and the maintenance of international morality be restored.

"Majority Want Peace."

The overwhelming majority of the peoples and nations of the world today want to live in peace. They seek the removal of barriers against trade. They want to exert themselves in industry, in agriculture and in business, that they may increase their wealth through the production of wealth-producing goods rather than striving to produce military planes and bombs and machine guns and cannon for the destruction of human lives and useful property.

In those nations of the world which seem to be piling armament on armament for purposes of aggression, and those other nations which fear acts of aggression against them and their security, a very high proportion of the national income is being spent directly for armaments. It runs from 30 to as high as 50 per cent.

The proportion that we in the United States spend is far less—11 or 12 per cent.

How happy we are that the circumstances of the moment permit us to put our money into bridges and boulevards, dams and reforestation, the conservation of our soil and many other kinds of useful works rather than into huge standing armies and vast supplies of implements of war.

I am compelled and you are compelled, nevertheless, to look ahead. The peace, the freedom and the security of 90 per cent of the population of the world is being jeopardized by the remaining 10 per cent who are threatening a breakdown of all international order and law. Surely the 90 per cent who want to live in peace under law and in accordance with moral standards that have received almost universal acceptance through the centuries, can and must find some way to make their will prevail.

The situation is definitely of universal concern. The questions involved relate not merely to violations of specific provisions of particular treaties; they are questions of war and of peace, of international law and especially of principles of humanity. It is true that they involve definite violations of agreements, and especially of the covenant of the League of Nations, the Briand-Kellogg pact and the Nine-Power Treaty. But they also involve problems of world economy, world security and world humanity.

It is true that the moral consciousness of the world must recognize the importance of removing injustices and well-founded grievances; but at the same time it must be aroused to the cardinal necessity of honoring sanctity of treaties, of respecting the rights and liberties of others and of putting an end to acts of international aggression.

"World Lawlessness Spreading."

It seems to be unfortunately true that the epidemic of world lawlessness is spreading.

When an epidemic of physical disease starts to spread, the community approves and joins in a quarantine of the patients in order to protect the health of the community against the spread of the disease.

It is my determination to pursue a policy of peace and to adopt every practicable measure to avoid involvement in war. It ought to be inconceivable that in this modern era, and in the face of experience, any nation could be so foolish and ruthless as to run the risk of plunging the whole world into war by invading and violating in contravention of solemn treaties, the territory of other nations that have done them no real harm and which are too weak to protect themselves adequately. Yet the peace of the world and the welfare and security of every nation is today being threatened by that very thing.

No nation which refuses to exercise forbearance and to respect the freedom and rights of others can long remain strong and retain the confidence and respect of other nations. No nation ever loses its dignity or good standing by conciliating its differences and by exercising great patience with and consideration for the rights of other nations.

"Trust Must Be Revived."

War is a contagion, whether it be declared or undeclared. It can engulf states and peoples remote from the original scene of hostilities. We are determined to keep out of war, yet we cannot insure ourselves against the disastrous effects of war and the dangers of involvement. We are adopting such measures as will minimize our risk of involvement, but we cannot have complete protection in a world of disorder in which confidence and security have broken down.

If civilization is to survive, the principles of the Prince of Peace must be restored. Shattered trust between nations must be revived.

Most important of all, the will for peace on the part of peace-loving nations must express itself to the end that nations that may be tempted to violate their agreements and the rights of others will desist from such a course. There must be positive endeavors to preserve peace.

America hates war. America hopes for peace. Therefore, America actively engages in the search for peace.

England Ready To Sell Madrid War Munitions

Will Arm Loyalists Unless Mussolini Withdraws From War.

By the United Press.

London, Oct. 5.—Great Britain is prepared to permit the sale of arms and munitions to the Spanish loyalist armies if, as is anticipated, Italy refuses to withdraw her troops from Spain.

The decision was taken in diplomatic conversations between the British and French foreign offices regarding the course of Anglo-French action in event of Premier Mussolini's refusal.

Newspaper advices in London indicated belief Il Duce not only was prepared to reject the Anglo-French bid for a tri-power conference on the volunteers question but might express an outright attitude of defiance toward the two democratic p wers.

The Laborite Daily Herald speculated on reports that Mussolini's reply would state:

1. That Italy will "back to the limit" Gen. Francisco Franco, of the Spanish insurgents.
2. That Italy denounces the 27-nation nonintervention accord.
3. That Italy contemplates large reinforcements to her Fascist volunteers already in Spain.

It was reported that the British Cabinet has received information that large Italian reinforcements have recently joined the Spanish rebel air forces operating from Majorca base in the Balearic island group.

This coincided with disclosures in Rome that Bruno Mussolini, 20-year-old son of Il Duce, has gone to Spain to fight for the rebels. Leading a squadron of Italian bombers.

Italians at Front Again.

Madrid, Oct. 5 (AP).—Spanish government troops fought forward tonight in a claw-like formation that threatened to trap several hundred rebels intrenched south of Madrid.

Both sides were fighting with bayonets and hand grenades on ground that has been drenched with blood many times in the nine-month siege of Spain's capital.

Government authorities asserted they had a report from Barbastro, 50 miles northeast of Zaragoza on the Aragon front, that Italian troops have reappeared in recent heavy insurgent offensives there.

D. C. Girl Relates Mistreatment by Japanese Soldiers

Miss Carol Lathrop, a slim, 18-year-old Washington girl whose rough treatment on July 20 by a Japanese sentry at Pieping precipitated an international "incident," returned yesterday to her home at 2129 Florida avenue. But the "incident" is closed, she announced through her mother, Mrs. Patrick M. Lathrop, widow of a United States Navy commander.

"The Japanese were riding high at Peiping," the mother said. "What happened to Carol was the lot of many others."

Japanese Paper Criticizes Britain For Aiding China

Tokyo (Wednesday), Oct. 6 (U.P.). Japanese newspapers today bitterly attacked Great Britain for supposedly "materially aiding" the Chinese government by exporting munitions and airplanes to China.

The newspaper Asahi charged that British planes were being flown into Chinese territory by Chinese pilots, provided with British certificates to take the planes from Hongkong.

Asahi also charged that "a certain power" had aided China in restoring service on the British-owned Hongkong-Hankow Railway line, and as a result the Chinese were importing large quantities of antiaircraft guns, machine guns and trench mortars and other munitions from England by way of Hongkong."

Johnson Calls Labor Bill Peril To Democracy

Fiery General Attacks Pending Standards Act at Forum.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 5.—At the New York Herald Tribune's seventh annual forum today—in a session devoted to discussions of war as well as economics—Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), New York, sat by with a thin and stony smile as Gen. Hugh S. Johnson denounced the Administration's pending labor standards bill.

President Roosevelt, from his railroad car at Cleveland, told the forum that men and women, old and young, should go not only to the West of Horace Greeley, but all the way to the Coast—should go South and North and East.

Advice to Youth.

"And in their travels, may I repeat a suggestion which I once gave a young man in New York who thought he knew it all. I said:

"'Take a second-hand car, put on a flannel shirt, drive it out to the Coast by the northern route and come back by the southern route. Don't stop anywhere where you have to pay more than $2 for your room and bath. Don't talk to your banking friends or your chamber of commerce friends, but specialize on the gasoline station man, the small restaurant keeper and your fellow automobile travelers.'"

In that way alone can one round out the picture—get a complete conception of any national problem, he said.

He said it was "unfortunately true that in respect to public affairs and national problems, the excellently educated man and woman form the least worthwhile opinions, for the simple reason that they have enough education to make them think they know it all, whereas actually their point of view is based on association with others who, in their geographical outlook, are about 1 inch wide."

Earlier, Johnson had said, grimacing:

Nearer to Dictatorship.

"It (the wages-hours bill) may get by, if it does, we are a lot further down the lane that leads to one-man government and the end of our traditional system of constitutional democracy than was ever imagined by the most sensational Douting Thomases, stay-at-home, calamity howler, economic royalist, modern Lord Macauley or Tory prince of privilege in the whole Roosevelt category of vituperative epithet emasculated for the radio and the mails."

He went on:

"From the Black appointment, from what the Labor Relations Board has done, and from the whole tenor of recent Administrative acts and utterances, you can imagine what manner of Simon Legrees will be appointed to that board to wield the lash over industry."

On the rostrum Wagner did not mention the measure by specific designation, but said:

"The principle we seek to translate into wage and hour legislation is that the great majority of American employers who have the welfare of America at heart shall have a floor of minimum wages and a ceiling of maximum hours."

Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, in a speech prepared for delivery tonight, and others, talked long over war and peace, and the best means of making peace prevail.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, put the Wagner act, the creation of his colleague, under critical analysis and said it had to be "mutualized," that is amended to keep it from being a "one-way traffic rule" (in favor of labor-union majorities) "on a four-way street."

Homer Martin, president of the C. I. O.-affiliated United Automobile Workers of America, said, however, that Vandenberg was trying "the shrewdest way of emasculating the (Wagner) law, while purporting to support it," and denied there were in it any "unreasonable burdens" upon employers.

Charlton Ogburn, as a spokesman for labor on the other side of the C. I. O.-A. F. of L. fense, opposed the Vandenberg amendments too.

The agricultural program was discussed by Secretary Wallace, who appealed for businessman support of his "ever normal granary" plan—a program designed to prevent violent price fluctuations by carrying over basic crop surpluses from the big years to the lean years by means of a government loan mechanism, and hinted at a special session of Congres to adopt such a program.

Wheeler McMillen, a farm magazine editor, took polite but sharp exception to much the Secretary had said.

Officers And Gentlemen, Not Mere Saber Rattlers

OUT IN front of Macdonough Hall the Navy Varsity was practicing. A wall of canvas protected the field from prying eyes, but it couldn't inclose the irregular thud of feet meeting pigskin, nor the occasional enthusiastic shouts of the onlookers.

In the open field behind Bancroft Hall, which looks out over the Severn, midshipmen in work suits of white cotton, lazily tossed footballs back and forth. On a bench under a tree two Plebes in blue service uniforms relaxed from the excitement of the first day of regular classes.

TOM McCARTHY.

"I wish to heaven I didn't have to wear these tight collars" the stockier of the two boys said. "You couldn't have gotten me into a collar like this for love nor money, back in Nebraska."

"It's your own fault. Your neck's too big," said the tall blond boy.

I asked the boys if they'd tell me something of what a Plebe feels and thinks about on entering the academy. The tall boy was from Texas, and the stocky boy was from Nebraska.

"Glad to help you sir," the boy from Nebraska said, "but I don't know as we'll know very much about what we think, because from what I can gather, Plebes aren't supposed to think."

"That's all right," I said, "and you can drop the sir."

"Well, you see," said the boy from Texas, "We're supposed to be——" He hunted for the word.

"We're supposed to be 'kind' to civilians," he said.

"Do I look as if I needed any kindness?"

"Gosh," he broke into laugh, "I guess that isn't what we're supposed to be."

"Courteous—you mean courteous," said the boy from Nebraska.

* * * *

I ASKED the boys how they got the urge to enter the Naval Academy. They were both pretty well agreed that hundreds of miles from the sea, as their homes were, they hadn't really thought it out in terms of a Navy career, but rather in terms of coming to the Naval Academy. They had read about it, heard about it, listened to broadcasts of Army and Navy games, and all of a sudden the idea took hold. When their appointments came through they were all set.

"Now, that you're here, how do you like it?"

"Well, it's a fine place," said the boy from Nebraska, "but we're Plebes."

"What's wrong with that?"

"They break it to you easy, in Reef Points, but it gives you some idea. There it just says 'Plebes: That insignificant being, the Fourth Classman.'"

"Over there," said the boy from Texas, "is Smoke Park. There the upper-classmen can sit around and take it easy, but Plebes can't go in there. Under Memorial Hall is Smoke Hall, where they can shoot billiards and take it easy, but Plebes can't go in there."

"After all the football games they have dances for the upper-classmen," said the boy from Nebraska, "but Plebes can't go to them. Upper-classmen can get time off to go into town, but the Plebes can't. Yes, sir," he concluded it's a swell place, but I sort of wish I wasn't a Plebe."

* * * *

"DO YOU find this very different from civilian life?" I asked the boys.

"Hopping out of bed every morning a little after 6, isn't so new to me," the boy from Nebraska said, "but the speed is killing me."

"You see," volunteered the boy from Texas, "we have to shave, shower, dress and clean the room till it shines in 25 minutes."

"And if they find any dust in your room," Nebraska chimed in, "they'll give you demerits."

"You look as though all this agreed with you," I told him.

"Shucks, yes," he admitted, "I've put on 17 pounds since I came here for the summer encampment."

"And I tell him," said the boy from Texas, "that's the reason he's having so much trouble with his collar."

* * * *

THE NAVAL ACADEMY does seem to agree with the boys.

Over in Macdonough Hall they can show you pictures of midshipmen as they entered the Academy, and as they left four years later, with 20 more pounds, a half an inch in height and a build which would make a professional athlete envious.

However, the cultural side of the midshipman's life isn't neglected, either. John Paul Jones' remarks about the necessity of an officer being "a gentleman of liberal education," are emphasized in the extra-curricular activities which allow the potential officer to try his hand at anything from fiction writing to painting. A dance band, mandolin club (without a single mandolin), camera club and a radio club, attest the diversity of the midshipmen's interests.

More courteous than any group of collegians I have seen, the Annapolis midshipmen, are at least as well and possibly better informed on the affairs of the day than any like group in collegiate institutions.

Particularly interesting to me was the reaction of upper-classmen, to the question of America's position in the crisis of undeclared war in the Far East.

As future officers the midshipmen were all definite on one point. They would follow orders!

As interested Americans, the majority had still another reaction.

"It's none of our darn business," they told me.

Parole Revocation Upheld in Capital

The District board of indeterminate sentence and parole yesterday called attention to a court decision to show that it has authority to revoke a parole which it had not granted.

Citing a decision of the court of appeals in the case of Erastus Jarman, an inmate of the District Reformatory, the board pointed out that the court held the revocation was legal although the board of parole had granted the parole before the District board was set up.

"In view of the fact that the local statute gives the District board complete jurisdiction over prisoners in the reformatory," the board stated, "the practical effect of the decision is to hold that it is immaterial whether parole was granted to the applicant by another board."

BODY BANKRUPT of ENERGY & VITALITY
OVERDRAWN of ESSENTIAL MINERALS

"Exhaustion of vital minerals in my body did not show like a hole in my suit, but on passing 40 I realized I was not as active as I was at 20. I had telltales of early aging, nervousness, dizzy spells, involuntary naps, sluggishness—distressing symptoms that kept warning me something was wrong with my system. I learned that the body in order to function properly must be replenished regularly with essential minerals (not with mushy, devitalized foods). I read about garlic as being a rich source of vital minerals: iron, copper, sulphur, magnesium, phosphorus, calcium, iodine and how these elements help to purify the system . . . prepare the digestive juices for better assimilation of food and build resistance against deficiency ailments. Thanks to D. Gosewisch's Garlic Tablets I can get all the benefits of this important protective food-aid without any of its unpleasant odor or taste. I feel young again."

BLOOD CIRCULATION NORMALIZED

Thousands report remarkable results bringing blood pressure back to normal with the continued used of D. Gosewisch's Garlic Tablets. They give relief in almost all cases of involuntary naps, dizzy spells, nervousness, sluggishness due to mineral starvation and intestinal putrefaction. D. Gosewisch's Garlic Tablets is garlic in its pure and most effective form. Chewed or swallowed they have no telltale of garlic odor or taste. They are delightful, convenient, sociable! Wallis Center of Attraction At Official Banquet in Paris

Duchess Wears Dark Blue Redingote; Duke Preoccupied and Silent at Dinner Until Host Addresses Him Directly.

Paris, Oct. 5 (AP).—The Duchess of Windsor was the center of attention tonight at the Windsors' first official dinner since they arrived in Paris.

She wore a tailored dark blue redingote; a small blue felt hat with a band of red ribbon around her head tied in a bow in back of her hair; beige suede gloves with stockings to match; dark blue shoes with slender straps across the instep; two large gold clips, one set in pigeon blood rubies and the other with sapphires, on the right lapel of her coat; ruby-tipped earrings of the same design, and several sapphire and gold bracelets on the left wrist.

The duke sat pre-occupied and silent, until the host, Edmond Labbe, chief commissioner of the Paris Exposition, and others addressed him directly.

Neither the duke nor his spokesman would say when the Windsors intended leaving for the United States to study working conditions. He has accepted engagements up to October 27 in Paris.

The dinner was aboard a miniature of the liner Normandie in the Seine off the exposition.

Roosevelt Note on Cards Asks Idle Census Aid

Count to Reach 31,000,000 in Homes, Trailers

Postmen Will Make First Check on Accuracy of Data.

Every unemployed or partly employed person in the country will receive a message from President Roosevelt on the registration blanks, made public yesterday, to be circulated in the November 16-17 unemployment census.

The President's message, on the back of the blanks, reads:

"If you are unemployed or partly employed and are able to work and are seeking work, please fill out this report card right away and mail it before midnight, Saturday, November 20, 1937. No postage stamp is needed.

"The Congress directed me to take this census. It is important to the unemployed and to everyone in this land that the census be complete, honest and accurate. If you give me the facts I shall try to use them for the benefit of all who need and want work and do not now have it."

To Reach Trailers, Shacks.

Not only will the cards be distributed by mail carriers to 31,000,000 homes in the United States, but they will be taken also to every trailer camp and to "shacks along the rivers and the railroads, where transients gather," John D. Biggers, administrator of the special census, said.

The questionnaire itself contains 14 questions, calling for the registrant's name, address, color or race, age, sex and ability to work. Then it asks:

"(a) Are you totally unemployed and want work; (b) partly employed and want more work; (c) working at WPA, NYA, CCC or other emergency work?"

It asks how many hours the registrant worked "last week" and how many weeks in the last 12 months, and his total income for the past week. Other queries deal with the occupation and the kind of business or industry in which the applicant has engaged, how many other workers are in his family and how many of them are unemployed or partly employed, as well as how many persons are mainly dependent on the registrant for support.

After the cards are returned to local postoffices, they will be sorted and turned over to postmen again for checking.

"If a postman should notice five blanks coming from a house where he knew there was only one person out of work," Biggers said, "he could stamp 'questionable' on all but one card. That will enable us to ascertain the margin of variation in the census."

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York, as president of the United States Conference of Mayors, in a statement asked all mayors to cooperate in taking the census. He said officials would ask mayors to name local committees to assist.

Biggers tomorrow will address a luncheon meeting at the National Press Club at 12:30 p. m., explaining the goal and procedure in the gigantic undertaking.

Mail Bag Stolen In Building Here

Postoffice inspectors and local police last night were searching for a man who stole a bag of mail from the lobby of the Carry Building, 927 Fifteenth street northwest.

Shortly after the theft a man attempted at the Riggs National Bank to cash a check which was identified as being in the bag. He fled, however, when the teller asked for identification.

Russell H. Thompson, superintendent of carriers at the City Postoffice, told local police two bags of mail had been left in the Carry Building lobby to be picked up by a letter carrier. One bag containing papers was unmolested, Thompson said.

The stolen package contained about 300 letters, the value of which is undetermined.

Davidson Met Killer, Is New Police Theory of whom are stationed at Quantico. Bean said the Davidson car was turning from the Marine reservation when it stopped to pick him up.

"The car only had one headlight," the youth reiterated, "and the driver said they wouldn't let him through the gates with the light out. He asked me where he could get it fixed and I told him at the Triangle garage. Then he asked me to ride with him. I was going that way, so I got in."

Bean said he recognized Davidson's car when he saw it Monday after it was wrecked near Triangle, presumably by the killer. He was convinced Davidson was driving the machine that night near Quantico.

"He asked me a lot of questions after I got in the car," Bean declared. "I was sort of scared, so when we reached the garage I got out. He couldn't get the light fixed there and had to go farther up the highway. The last time I saw him, he was headed north toward Washington."

A concerted hunt for the missing murder gun—a .38-caliber revolver—will be started this morning near the scene of the crime. A posse of county officers and residents, led by State Policeman Sneed, will beat through the underbrush along a 2-mile stretch from Widewater road to the Richmond highway.

Sneed said today he would have 15 children from the Stafford High School search the surrounding territory for a pistol and a knife which may have brought death to Davidson.

Working on a theory the murderer may have thrown his weapon into wooded swamplands along a desolate dirt road leading to the spot where Davidson was found, investigators hope to recover it in order to obtain fingerprints.

Sergt. McDermott yesterday asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation identification division to co-operate in the case, and received assurance that laboratory facilities would be made available.

Questioned last night about progress of the investigation, Sergt. McDermott declared:

"Things are shaping up fine—but we still have a lot of digging to do."

For more than an hour yesterday he was in conference with Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of Washington detectives. Inspector Thompson said the investigators had "several suspects, but nothing definite."

State Policeman Sneed doubted if the slayer carried his gun with him after the murder.

"I'm sure he threw it away in the bushes," said Sneed, "and if we search long enough I'm positive we'll find it. I don't think the killer would dare carry the weapon onto the main highway after committing the crime."

Accompanied by Detective Sergt. Clyde N. Strange, of the local homicide squad, Sergt. McDermott visited Davidson's home at 555 Randolph street northwest yesterday to question relatives and search the dea man's belongings.

Several snapshots of Davidson were found and will be distribuuted to residents and commercial places along the Richmond road near Triangle and Stafford in an effort to determine if the 52-year-old Chamber of Commerce official frequented the neighborhood.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Burdett, joint owners of a roadside eating stand 8 miles north of Triangle, said yesterday they "thought" Davidson was the same who visited their place "sometime Sunday afternoon" and bought a botttle of gingerale.

This man—if it were Davidson—the Burdetts said, stopped at the

Davidson Had Hard Day's Toil Before Starting on Death Ride

When Elmer J. Davidson started on the Sunday night automobile ride which ended in his death, he had accomplished "two days of work crowded into one" and left behind years of legal research as devoid of murder clews as the ordinary time table in a railway station.

Pages and pages of shorthand notes and a large stack of typing piled neatly on his desk convince associates he spent Sunday working, as he had planned, and that his mind was untroubled as he labored rapidly.

"I'd say he had put two days of work into one," John Redpath, chief of the research division, in which Davidson was an assistant, declared last night. But for the fact that late comers to the office must register on the night blotter—and his name is not there—his "boss" would be inclined to believe he had come back at night to cram in some more hours.

Following his custom of many years, Davidson did his own typing and made his own stenographic notes. He was working on the annual report which the Chamber of Commerce issues on cases scheduled to come before the Supreme Court at the current session.

"It is just a case of being here one day and dead the next. Nobody can think of a motive for his murder," said William M. Mackie, legislative assistant, who occupied the desk next to him and had known him for more than 20 years.

The same dead end is reached when the home life of the 52-year-old bachelor is scrutinized.

"Nothing he did could be called unusual," declared Mary Dow, daughter of Mrs. Laura Davidson Dow, 555 Randolph street northwest, where he made his home. "He was grand to us, and had the jolliest laugh I ever have heard. Mrs. Dow was a sister.

Yet there was definitely a "private chapter" in the life of the attorney.

"He absolutely never discussed his private affairs. He was jolly, extremely kind and much respected, but even over the lunch table and after golf games he did not loosen up as many men do," Mackie said.

He never told his sister where he was going on the numerous automobile rides he took. While this may not be unusual, it is from this reticence that all surmises concerning his death must arise. If his murder was motivated—as detectives believe—the motive must be found in the "private chapter," his friends believe.

Late yesterday, Commonwealth's Attorney G. B. Wallace, of Stafford, requested that a new examination be made of Davidson's body.

"I want to ascertain," he told Policeman Sneed, "if the stab wound alone could have caused death."

But without another examination, Coroner J. C. Gordon indicated the wound would have proved fatal eventually but not instantly. Davidson, said Dr. Gordon, was alive when he was shot through the forehead.

"If his heart hadn't been beating," said the coroner, "there wouldn't have been much blood from the wound in the head. I believe he was stabbed first—just below the heart—and then shot."

Estimate Cuts Asked to Avert Budget Deficit

Many Capitol Leaders Are Skeptical as War on Spending Opens.

The President, in a speech September 28, said he expected to have the budget "definitely balanced by the next fiscal year." Representative Clarence Cannon, of Missouri, ranking member under Taylor, had made a similar forecast.

But Chairman Carter Glass, of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and Representative John Taber, ranking Republican member of the House committee, had expressed pessimism on the trend of Federal outlays.

Cannon placed total appropriations at the last session at $9,355,595,892, and claimed Congress actually cut expenditures under budget estimates by $122,347,466. Glass estimated last appropriations at nearly $9,400,000,000, and said that if 1936 bonus disbursements were deducted, Congress actually appropriated more in 1937 than in 1936. Taber, using a different method of calculation, computed 1937 appropriations at the top of $10,252,000,000.

The House Appropriations chairman said hearings on the next supply bill, independent offices, probably will be opened by Representative Clifford Woodrum, sub-committee chairman, by December 1, and other hearings will open as rapidly as can be arranged.

Exchange Of Scholars.

The selection of Lewis W. Douglas, former Director of the Budget, as principal of McGill University, calls attention to the closeness of the scholastic ties that bind this country to its northern neighbor. The appointment of a citizen of the United States to the headship of one of Canada's leading educational institutions is unusual. But it is essentially an outgrowth of the free interchange of professorial talent that has been accepted for many years.

Not only has there been a constant movement of American and Canadian students across the border, but permanent positions in both American and Canadian universities have frequently been filled by teachers from opposite sides of the line. Thus a few years ago over 600 Canadians were said to be holding academic positions in the United States and a smaller number of Americans were teaching in six leading Canadian universities.

During the years of depression, when retrenchment in the colleges and universities was the order of the day, it was inevitable that some resentment would arise toward employment of outsiders, even near neighbors. Since the movement this way was much heavier than the exodus to Canada, there was also a danger that we might become nationalistically minded to the point of discouraging the influx of Canadian scholars. That would have been a pity, since our universities greatly need the leavening effect of outside elements to save them from becoming provincial in their outlook.

The fact that Canada has taken one of our outstanding young men to head its most famous university will do much to allay any nascent opposition to the employment of Canadians by our institutions of higher learning. Thus, Mr. Douglas' new position should serve not only to cement ties of long standing but to make for that growth of understanding between the two countries which is the best guarantee of peaceful and friendly relations.

Foiled By A File.

Does Tillie the Toiler go in for "escape literature" or old-fashioned romance? As she carefully inscribes the oo-hook on her dictation pad, is she thinking about Rhett Butler or Deadeye Dick? And what makes a clerk inadvertently slip a letter from Mr. Smith into Mr. Jones' file? Is it because she's puzzling over that book on murder-in-the-old-millstream or trying to recall how to have orchids-on-her-budget? It is such questions as these which persuaded Dr. Ralph Tyler, of Ohio State University, to conduct a national poll of literary tastes in every walk of life.

Although Dr. Tyler plans to continue his research along this line four more years, he has just made a preliminary report of the findings to date. Apparently the boss, according to this survey, spends his spare time on the golf links or the squash courts. One thing is certain—he doesn't devote it to reading. The daughter of the boss, on the other hand, makes a very nice showing compared to her recalcitrant pa. But it's the boss' secretary and office force who keep the circulating libraries in the black.

Stenographers, if we are to accept Dr. Tyler's findings, go in strongest for goo and glamour. Clerks prefer to forget the 9-to-5 routine in mystery stories. And no wonder! For tracing frail clews and murderers must seem purely elementary to them after they have spent all day running down a missing letter which, in most cases, has been left at their employer's home in his other suit of clothes.

Excellent Fish Story.

An Associated Press dispatch from Boston, home of the sacred cod, carries the implication that this celebrated member of the finny tribe is prepared, when it gets the hook at last, to write Finis with its own fountain pen.

The dispatch sets forth that a member of an ocean-going trawler now has in his possession a pen that he took from the stomach of a 60-pound "whale" cod, and that the said pen was filled with ink and in perfect working condition.

All of which we implicitly believe.

Doubting Thomases may assert that the "pen" was nothing but a squid, strongly encased in imaginary nacre (a beautifully iridescent material), and carrying his defensive liquor like a gentleman. But the fishermen prefer to think, or profess to believe, that the fish swallowed the pen when a careless passenger (probably a blurb writer) accidentally dropped it over the side of an Atlantic liner.

And we'll swallow that one, too.

Mounting Railway Costs.

The National Mediation Board has once more demonstrated its usefulness as an agency for facilitating peaceful settlements of wage disputes between the carriers and their employes. As a result of the board's intervention, after the operating rail unions had voted to strike for a 20 per cent increase in pay, a compromise agreement has been reached which calls for an average increase of between 6 and 7 per cent. This is expected to add about $35,000,000 to the annual wages bill of the roads, as compared with the approximately $100,000,000 increase originally demanded.

Undoubtedly the unions, for bargaining leverage, asked more than they had any hope of obtaining. And the roads, on the other hand, were well aware that some concessions would have to be made. Nevertheless, had there been no effective Federal mediatory machinery, it is entirely possible that the unions' strike threat would have been carried into execution.

While the railroads are singularly fortunate in having been virtually free from strikes for more than a decade, or since passage of the railway labor act, they are not for that reason in an enviable position. Peaceful settlement of labor disputes—especially when peace is bought by granting wage increases—provides no solution of the roads' financial difficulties. On the contrary, the procedure may aggravate them. The latest wage agreement, for instance, follows recent increases in the wages of non-operating union employes estimated to add about $100,000,000 to railroad operating costs.

That is not all. Operating outlays have been further swollen by increased costs of material, taxes have likewise increased and revenues have been unfavorably affected by the dropping of emergency freight rate charges. Railway managements point out that last year operating revenues would have produced little or no margin over operating expenses and taxes if all these increases had been effective at that time and subsequent rate reductions in force.

Of course some roads are in a much better position to meet increased costs of operation than others. But by that same token others are unable to pay their way. For the great majority of the carriers, the need for relief from the mounting pressure of operating costs is manifest. The improvement in gross earnings resulting from business recovery has been hopeful. But the disproportionately rapid rise in operating costs has already brought about a decline in monthly net earnings from the level of the preceding year.

A petition for increased freight rates on specific commodities is now pending before the I. C. C. and it is expected that the roads will also make requests for a horizontal increase in rates to provide further offsets to increased operating costs. Of course there are distinct limits to the extent to which relief can be obtained by such means. The competition of highway and waterway transportation has to be considered, and shipper resistance is also an important factor.

The funds to finance increased outlays have to be found, however, if the roads are to remain self-sustaining. That being the situation, the wage agreements naturally lead to rate adjustments upward, taking toll first from the shippers and eventually from the consuming public.

Child Labor Amendments.

Kentucky's highest court has set up what may prove to be another serious obstacle to ratification of the proposed child-labor amendment to the Constitution. Its decision that this year's approval of the amendment by the Kentucky legislature was of no avail, because a previous legislature had rejected it, also raises a most important constitutional issue.

Of course, the decisions of State courts on constitutional questions are not final. But the logic of the highest judges at Frankfort cannot be lightly set aside. When this controversy arose, they point out, 20 States, including Kentucky, had rejected the amendment. Since approval of the legislatures or the people in three-fourths of the States is essential to make an amendment valid, the court decided that this proposal was dead when more than one-fourth of the legislatures voted against it.

The question whether a State may change its mind about a proposed amendment has never been finally decided. Obviously, however, there must be some limitation to the States' right to reverse what a previous legislature has done in this respect. Certainly a State could not upset an amendment after it had been ratified by the required three-fourths majority and proclaimed in effect by the Secretary of State. Where, then, should the line against reconsideration be drawn?

In the interests of clarity and simplicity it seems desirable to let the first action of a legislature or convention on a proposed amendment remain in effect. Otherwise the issue is likely to be revived again and again. Some States might be changing rejection into consent while others were changing consent into rejection. The possibilities for confusion on a highly controversial amendment would seem to be endless.

If the Supreme Court should follow the same logic as the Kentucky court in ruling out this source of confusion, it would be impossible now to incorporate the child labor resolution of 1924 in the Constitution. In any event its chances of approval appear to be very slim as the result of the attitude taken by several legislatures in session this year.

The Kentucky decision becomes, therefore, another argument in favor of substituting the pending Vandenberg resolution for the moribund amendment now before the States. Senator Vandenberg's proposal eliminates virtually every objection to the 1924 resolution. Its ratification might well be as speedy as action on the present amendment has been slow.

French Realism.

The program of action announced by the French cabinet, after its recent emergency session, bears witness both to the good sense of the French people and the inherent strength and stability of their republic.

At a time of grave financial crisis, reflected in the decline in the exchange value of the franc to the lowest point in 11 years, the men at the helm in France refuse to be stampeded into any line of action smacking of totalitarianism. The government, said the communique:

> confirms its absolute opposition to all measures of exchange control, of constraint or autarchy and its will to remain faithful to free money and to the policy laid down by the tripartite agreement of September, 1936, which unites France to the great British and American democracies

This is heartening. It is also heartening that the radical French cabinet, containing a heavy representation of Socialists, shows itself so clear-eyed about the difficulties that have arisen as a result of the reforms instituted by the first Popular Front government.

There is little question of the theoretical desirability of these reforms. But if France is to get out of its present slough of economic despond and financial confusion they cannot continue to be applied in any doctrinaire fashion. It has become very clear, for instance, that the horizontal application of the 40-hour law has worked great hardships in many cases and has tended, in no small measure, to curtail production at a time when French productivity must be increased if the actual standard of living is not to fall, regardless of nominal wage rates in depreciating francs.

Leon Blum, when premier, pointed out this fact. Now he and his fellow Socialists in the cabinet are agreed that the modification of the 40-hour law in the interests of national welfare is essential. But this concession on their part is offset by the tacit acceptance of the business groups that the law itself may remain as a standard. The spirit of compromise revealed is of the very essence of successful democratic government.

All elements in the cabinet are also agreed that the situation in France today calls for "public order and social discipline." There must be no further violations of collective contracts either by employers or workers; there must be no sit-down strikes and no resort to violent tactics. These the government is determined "not to permit to happen again."

Perhaps because of the grave international tension, the French are facing their domestic problems calmly and coolly. Even the Communists, though they may find certain of the proposed measures little to their liking, seem likely to fall in line with the cabinet's program of action. Now as always in times of crisis the basic realism of the French people, and their very real patriotism, transcends doctrinaire beliefs and considerations of political advantage.

A Sure Sign.

Previews and tryouts are again in order. These are the days when the old trial-and-error methods are exercised on fall shows and fall clothes. A comedy opens on Broadway and a "bolero of weeping monkey fur" makes its first appearance in Paris. They are equally funny, but the former is designed to be laughed at while the latter is not.

But interest in these customary signs of autumn must take second place. For one of the oddest previews in all history began last week in the Hayden Planetarium in New York. Strange as it may seem, however, the exhibitors don't expect any of their little numbers to be popular this coming season. For the stars in this collection are the kind that shoot and the preview itself is a sort of dress rehearsal for the end of the world!

Over in this corner, ladies and gentlemen, is the brightest spot in the whole Hayden collection—the sun. But, unfortunately, if this little model should choose to give all, the human race would be burned to a cinder. On the other hand, if it should cool off, as so many stars do, the earth would freeze up like an immense frigidaire. Indeed, if the numerous stars represented in this Planetarium were to act as temperamentally as those in the Hollywood firmament, there wouldn't be a Hollywood or any other kind of firmament.

But, aver the scientists, the end is not yet in sight despite this awesome preview. So we might as well resign ourselves to a "razzle-dazzle of sequins" and a "frenzy of furs." When goofy predictions such as these cease to appear in the fall, then we won't need any scientists to tell us that the end of the world has come.

"The skunk makes a devoted and cunning house pet if he feels sure he's safe," declares a naturalist. Maybe so, but we shouldn't care for one. We'd be afraid he might unexpectedly imagine he was in danger.

It's far easier to prove to a man that he is mistaken about something he knows than to show him that he is in error concerning something he believes.

"The Official Viewpoint."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Permit me to call your attention to certain facts in connection with the charges made by Abraham Epstein against the Social Security Board that your editorial in Sunday's paper entirely overlooks.

The behavior of the New York regional director of this board is a much more serious offense than your analysis would indicate.

The attack on Mr. Epstein began with a telephone conversation between Mrs. Ruth Tennant, a representative of the New York Social Security Board, and Dr. Wallace Sayre, assistant professor of government at New York University and Mr. Epstein's immediate superior. In this conversation Mrs. Tennant, according to Prof. Sayre, stated that "Mr. Epstein's point of view would not probably be that of the existing social security administration machinery" and that, therefore, "they offered to supplement the courses with a statement of the point of view of the Administration."

When the university stood back of Mr. Epstein, and the local social security officials realized their efforts to "supplement" Mr. Epstein's course would be rejected, Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg, regional director of the Social Security Board, tried to put a better light on the situation in a letter suggesting that "an authorized representative of the Social Security Board" be invited "to supplement" Mr. Epstein's course "with an exposition of the policies, administration and methods of procedure actually in operation." This letter cannot be considered a satisfactory explanation of the telephone conversation mentioned above.

Furthermore, the letter written by A. J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board, in answer to Mr. Epstein's complaint is equally unsatisfactory when he states that if "Mrs. Rosenberg's office suggested that the university have more than one person lecture on social insurance . . . I do not see why you should object."

Since when does a self-respecting American university put in additional courses on a subject whenever Government functionaries object to the views of one of its professors? Mr. Epstein's indignation seems to me justified, as well as his description of such behavior as closely akin to that of Hitler and Mussolini. Only by vociferous objections to such authoritarianism whenever it dares to show itself, can our universities be encouraged to keep their courses free of Government subsidized propaganda.

NEW YORKER.

New York, Oct. 4.

[Ed. Note: The Post's editorial on this episode was largely based on the statement of Dean Dearborn, of New York University, that "the question of academic freedom was not involved" and that Mrs. Rosenberg's offer was "not an attempt to counteract" Mr. Epstein's lectures.]

Minimum Wages.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

After reading L. Baker's outburst in The Post of October 4, I believe it only fair that you take space to present the other side of the picture, which I shall try and present in this letter briefly and logically.

To begin with, the $14.57 wage, the public must remember, is suggested as the minimum, which means that any girl regardless of her age, ability, or experience would be assured of that amount, in spite of the fact that employers are besieged with many requests from girls who want to work without pay in order to learn the business.

The reason that employers fight to keep wages at reasonable levels is because they know that sharp increases in wages will bring sharp increases in prices, which the public will quickly resent. Few people understand that wages represent the largest single item of overhead, larger than rent, lights, insurance, advertising, etc. There is no magic formula whereby any of these costs can be sharply increased without being reflected in the selling price of the merchandise or product . . . or else putting the employer out of business.

In the main most employers welcome a fair minimum wage law, because it helps equalize the cost of doing business and would tend to eliminate unfair competition.

It is only just to point out, however, that such a law will only help the weak and inefficient employe, since the more capable worker will always manage to secure a premium for her services with or without minimum wage laws.

"Why Be Industrious?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In The Post of September 30 you relate how families are to be housed at Greenbelt by Uncle Sam with furnished heat, water and the like in houses that cost Uncle Sam on the average of $16,302 (Greenbelt cost $14,227,000 for 885 houses) for $438 per year!

The owner of a home in the District of Columbia has just had his taxes upped and will now have to pay almost as much taxes to own his $16,302 home as Greenbeltians will pay to live in one of these up-to-date luxurious homes of Uncle Sam. What an injustice! What a penalty for industry, thrift and providence! What a reward to the Greenbeltians for improvidence! Why work? Why save? Why be industrious?

If home owners were exempted from taxes here as they are in some States in order to promote home owning it would help some. Home owners here are apparently being taxed for owning their homes, and homes built with the taxpayers' money are loaned for only $438! If that is not class legislation and a financial perversion of public fund to the Nth degree there never was any such thing even in the days of tyrannical feudalism and old King John before Magna Charta.

"OUTRAGED."

Washington, September 30.

"Santa Claus At Greenbelt."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your editorial, "Santa Claus at Greenbelt," of October 4, should be read by all thinking American taxpayers, and especially by those who still cling to the traditional principles of true American independence and their inborn sense of plain, downright respectability.

This project and others of its kind are no greater imposition on the taxpayer than is the Youth Educational Movement, both experiments calling upon the taxpayer to do for his neighbors that which he has had to reluctantly forego for his own children, and in most cases because he wished to retain the above-mentioned principles and also implant them in his children.

Being an American reared and educated under the American flag, I, naturally, was impressed and somewhat alarmed to read the eligible requirements, one of which being that a family should have no more than four children. The salary, employment, credit rating, etc., I can readily understand (especially if the inhabitants are Government employed) how these features of the scheme can be adjusted satisfactorily, but the following thoughts and questions leave me in a state of real concern:

That's not the same Santa Claus we Americans knew when we were children—he'll be disappointed.

It should be a good boost for Mrs. Sanger's business.

Nevertheless, the four-children feature cannot be blamed on fascism, naziism or communism, and that is something to be thankful for, even though we cannot class it as Americanism, either, just plain New Dealism.

Can the same flag of the free, which waves over the land of the free, the one I know, wave with the same grace and freedom over Greenbelt? Should the American flag be subjected to the same treatment as that imposed upon the real Democratic Party and the Supreme Court?

Representative Jenckes, the guardian of the American flag, evidently thinks so.

In Praise Of McCarthy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Some of the old-time reporters here are glad to see a youngster coming along who can add the grace of literary style to his workaday observations.

McCarthy's work averages high, but he is best when assigned to serious subjects; keep him off ballyhoo and post-midnight "scenics" and he will become a literary ace. When he gets through with Annapolis, suggest put him on Mount Vernon for a similar series.

The Nine-Power Treaty.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is impossible to follow Mrs. Florence Boeckel's sequence of sentences. But the perusal of her sophistries does make it seem less strange that such a mind should favor the silly policy of making the world safe for the dictators and militarists.

The Nine-Power Treaty bound the powers to respect the territorial and administrative integrity of China. To support this general provision, it further provided that China should not grant, and the powers should not aid their nationals in seeking any special privileges in China—that is, there were to be no more spheres of influence, no more "leased" ports, no monopolistic concessions. But Mrs. Boeckel calls this supporting provision a "contradiction" of the main pledge because it seeks to "control the economic policy of China." Mrs. Boeckel will be telling us next that every time Mr. Hull signs a most-favored-nation treaty he is letting some other country "control the economic policy of the United States!"

By some process of feeling (it can't be reasoning), Mrs. Boeckel objects to consultation under the Nine-Power Treaty because, if successful, it would protect from the Mikado's bandits not only the 99½ per cent of China owned by the Chinese but also the (possibly) one-half per cent controlled by the Americans, British, etc.

Mrs. Boeckel intimates that little would be left of China "if the great powers went to war on her soil and then drew up the terms of peace." As no one has proposed anything more than economic sanctions and naval pressure, it is a straw man. But if the powers did go in successfully, they might prevent the destruction of scores of cities and save a million Chinese lives. The signatories of the Nine Power pact, other than Japan, recognize it as binding. They have been observing it. Britain has abandoned one port and one concession, Belgium one concession. Tariff autonomy was restored to China. The Chinese have been given a much larger part in the government of the International Settlement at Shanghai. Occidental imperialism is in retreat in China; Japan alone is massacring the Chinese and robbing them of their resources.

But Mrs. Boeckel wouldn't have anybody do anything to stop this massacre and theft lest "the present war between two nations become a war among many." Hitler himself could not have expressed the hope and aim of the dictators better! Mrs. Boeckel is their perfect ally. She and they want to limit each war to just two countries—e. g. Germany vs. Czechoslovakia, Italy vs. Ethiopia, Italy vs. Spain, Germany vs. Poland, and so on—a long series of relatively easy conquests building up immense military empires. Herr Goebbels has said that the democracies are fat cattle going to the slaughterhouse. Apparently they are, if they follow Mrs. Boeckel with her notion that the way to preserve the peace of the world and of the United States is to stand aside while the Japanese militarists create a military empire of 600,000,000 population and continental resources.

Rolls On The Green.

With their surface like mirrors the rain-washed streets might have been said (by the flippant) to have been in a reflective mood. But at Eighteenth street and Columbia road you couldn't see the street for cars. That the cars could ever get anywhere seemed impossible. They were apparently jelled.

The stranger was, happily, in no hurry; and, more happily still, he was not driving. He looked about him interestedly and presently observed that the jammed mass showed signs of fermentation. There was first movement and then direction. The taxi shot forward.

"A rainy day like this," said the stranger, "ought to be good for the taxi business."

There are men who speedily grow weary of banalities, but the taxi driver (who strongly suggested, and strangely resembled, Jeeves) was a good guy and he opened up.

As the poet, Samual Weller, once remarked in summing up existence (said the taxi driver), it is and it isn't. There are more cars on the streets when the rain is falling and more people waiting for taxis; and in a way one fact cancels the other. On a clear day I could drive you to where you want to go in 6 minutes; today it will take me 15. The difference may tote high in a day's work. Get the idea? On a clear day I may have to wait for a fare. On a wet day I may do my waiting in a jam with a fare inside.

Of course, I have good days and bad days, but the weather has less to do with it than you would imagine. How do I account for it? I don't. I have been made modest by many bad guesses.

Ever play solitaire? Some days you can't win. Other days you have luck.

This mutibility is not peculiar to cards. You play the minutes as they come to you. Time deals them out, but Chance shuffles them first. Which is not denying, as my old preceptor used to say, that Chance itself may be working under the strictest of rules.

In the taxi business it isn't only the fares or the lack of them that decides the day's rating. It's the breaks you get and the bumps you get. It's the kind of drivers there are in the cars you meet. And I don't mean the dumb ones, though they are bad enough. It's the fresh guys, the know-it-alls.

Get some of those fellows at home and they're decent enough chaps. But getting into a car gives them delusions of grandeur. Once they have stepped on the starter they think they are running the universe. They go dashing here and there, with every crossing a scratch from which they are racing. They don't give themselves time to be decent.

I'm not denying that there are some taxi drivers that way, too. Leave it to the fellows who write to the newspapers the taxi drivers are the worst offenders, but that's hooey. It's like the ballyhoo against the bus and truck drivers. Believe it or not, most of them are careful. They have to be or lose their jobs. And the taxi driver is in the same class, even when he owns his own car, as I do.

Yes, sir, it's mine; or it will be when I have paid a few more dollars. I've had it 18 months and I pay a little on it every day; or nearly every day. One thousand and eighty dollars it cost me; one thousand and eighty and ready to roll. And that includes insurance. Not so bad. It's a good little wagon.

I used to rent. Not so good. Hand-to-mouth, of course; but so is this. But now I have what I can call my own; and in a very little while I won't be miscalling it even a few cent's worth.

The trouble with renting is that you so often get what others don't want; just the leavings; and the best is none too good in any business. And it's good for a man to own and run his own car. It makes him careful.

I'm not denying that it is sometimes tough sledding. I work all kinds of hours, 16, 18, sometimes 24; just till I get tired; and sometimes just long enough to pay for what's due for the day.

Some of the fellows pay by the week; but not me. You know how it is. You have the money in your pocket and something turns up that you need, and you get it; and when payment is due you haven't got it. So every day I pay; or nearly ever day. Once in a while I miss and make it up next day; and once in a greater while I just let it slide. But always I call up the boss and let him know I won't be around. That's only decent.

And by and by the car will be mine. Yeah. And by and by the car will be worn out and I'll have to get another. But that's still ahead. And what about it?

It's what you might call back-handed saving; but it's saving just the same. It's what I tell my wife when she pays the installment on the radio. What would we do with our money supposing we had it and saved it? We'd buy a radio for one thing. Well, then! It's good business—so long as the radio doesn't wear out before it is paid for. That sums up all the virtues and all the vices not only of installment buying but of all borrowing, private or public.

Sometimes I think it is the merest chance I didn't become a financier and do my back-hand saving in millions. Thank you. Sure! Sometimes I feel like that. Millions. And then again there are times when it is only the tip that keeps me from feeling like 30 cents.

"Oh, Dry Up!"

IT IS MY GUESS that the Ku Klux issue will soon die down merely because it takes two to make an argument, and Hugo and the President are smart enough to see that if they keep still the opposition will have to start repeating. Moreover, the opposition will be talking to itself. After a while the public will get tired of the repetition of a consistently sour note and out of annoyance if for no other reason will say something to the general effect of "Oh, dry up about the Klan."

It seems probable, also, that the three elements of the population which were singled out for discrimination and other dirty treatment by the organization to which Hugo gave an oath will have nothing to fear at his hands as a justice of the Supreme Court. He is sitting pretty in a well-paid, permanent job, safe from reprisals by his old comrades in the sacred, unfailing bond of klannishness, and that security is by no means the least attraction to a politician of his type.

If Hugo could have won election to the Senate in the first place without joining up, he probably would have held aloof. It seems so from his radio oration. And, on his record, it appears that as soon as the heat was off back there in the '20s and the Klan no longer was in a position to yank him around by the mouth, he permitted himself to take up normal association with those late untouchables who came within his professional and social zone.

• • • •

SO WE HAVE for assurance on this score the fact that he is now independent of the Klan's anger and the wrath of all the carbon copies of that organization which are now springing up around the country, plus an apparent lack of serious personal religious and racial intolerance, plus one thing more. Another assurance is the fact that, although he did not denounce but merely renounced the Klan, he did denounce with considerable emphasis the selling points by which the Klan was peddled to native-born, white Protestants. He could have been less slippery, but after all, there is something to chew on in the paragraph where he said:—"At no meeting of any organization, social, political or fraternal, have I ever indicated the slightest departure from my steadfast faith in the unfettered right of every American to follow his conscience in matters of religion. I have no sympathy with any organization or group which anywhere or at any time arrogates to itself the un-American power to interfere in the slightest degree with complete religious freedom. No words have ever been or will ever be spoken by me, directly or indirectly, indicating that any native or foreign-born person in our free country should or could be restricted in his right to worship according to the dictates of his conscience."

Against the truth or honesty of these statements his Klan oath must be considered. If he never had any sympathy and so forth, why did he join the Klan, and if the Klan wasn't opposed to racial and religious tolerance why did he quit it? Nevertheless, one consideration taken with another gives a feeling that on these matters Hugo will try to be decent from now on.

• • • •

As to his fitness otherwise to serve on the big court the doubts are more lively. You have to form an opinion of his honesty by his conduct during the confirmation fuss and by remembering that, for cheap political advancement, he took an oath to an outfit dedicated to propositions which he now declares that he always has abhorred. You have to bear in mind, too, that, like the President himself, he has been reckless in his harassment of people whom he was determined to get or at least determined to humiliate. There are other rights besides those of religious and racial freedom for which people sometimes must appeal to the Supreme Court, and Hugo may not be very fastidious in his regard for those rights if they seem to obstruct the measures for which he has been selected as yes-man. As to those there is no assurance beyond his general oath and his conscience.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Terrible Effect Of The Black Broadcast.

From all over the country come reports indicating unexpected and deplorable effects of the recent coast-to-coast broadcast by Mr. Justice Black. It seems that nobody will answer anything except over a national hook-up. In Des Moines, Iowa, four wives reported that to the question, "Well, where have you been up to this hour of the morning?" their husbands had slammed the doors and remarked, "You'll get your answer to that on the radio."

• • • •

In Denver, Colo., a Mr. Thaddeus Swippell, a stranger in town himself, walked up to a policeman and asked, "What time is it?" To his astonishment the cop looked him straight in the eye and said, "That will all come out in my next broadcast. And watch out for maneuvers."

• • • •

Tiding from other points follow:

Derby, Conn.—Posolorois Kolopolopp, charged with being a horse thief, refused to plead guilty or not guilty in the local court today unless wired for sound. He will be taken before the radio tomorrow. It is understood Mr. Kolopolopp's contention is that while he was a horse thief at one time he is no longer a horse thief and is one of the best friends a horse ever had.

• • • •

Oil City, Pa.—To the astonishment of the clergymen and assembled guests, Dudley K. Awk answered "Do you take this woman?" at a bridal ceremony today with "Where the devil is the microphone?"

When told there was no hook-up he dashed out, dragging his bride with him.

"America confronts a great evil," declared Mr. Awk later. "The whole future of the country is involved. What's to become of a nation of free people if there are not enough mikes to go around?"

• • • •

Tampa, Fla.—"Will you have it on white or rye?" asked a waiter of a traveling jurist named Foops today at the Owl Eatery.

"I'll let you know over Station POW at 8:15," replied the stranger, "and there'll be singing and tap dancing, too."

• • • •

Chicago, Ill.—The bar reports a curious incident in the Superior Court here. A prisoner was arraigned on a charge of setting fire to the Old People's Home.

"Do you desire to plead at this time?" asked the court.

"I dunno. What wave length is this court on and who is the sponsor?" demanded the prisoner, who is understood to claim that he is a model citizen and hasn't fired an Old People's Home in several weeks now.

More Letters On The Black Case

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Could Mr. Justice Black be as tolerant now as he claims to be, and not be deeply repentant and ashamed of his former membership in the Ku Klux Klan? NO.

Could he be deeply repentant and ashamed of his membership in the Klan and not be willing to make any atonement for it? NO.

Has he evinced any desire to atone for or expiate his past act in defiance of the Bill of Rights which he now so ardently defends? Did he admit the act to the Senate body and stand ready to pay the penalty, if one should be inflicted? Did he disdain to take refuge in a mask of silence (almost as ignoble as the mask of the Klan rider) when the question of his connection with the Klan was raised at the time of the Senate hearings? Has he offered to resign? NO.

By simple deduction you get the answer: Mr. Justice Black's character is not essentially different from what it was when he joined the Klan. The "cataclysm" has not occurred. And the responsibility for placing such a man on the Supreme Court lies with the President and the Senate. Theirs is the blame. VERONICA SMITH.

Washington, Oct. 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The radio explanation of Justice Black that he once joined the Ku Klux Klan, but later withdrew, and now repudiates race hatred and religious bigotry for which the hooded order stands, is entirely satisfactory to many, but by no means to all of the American people. There is a sharp differentiation between an ex-member of the Klan and one who still holds his membership in that oath-bound order. Had it turned out that Justice Black was still a member of the Klan his position would have been universally regarded as untenable, and his resignation would have been forced by the behest of undivided popular demand.

The dilemma arises as to how the President or the public is to determine whether a candidate for office is, or is not, a Klan affiliate, and, also, whether amnesty shall be extended to a former member who has since withdrawn, and withheld from one who still retains his membership.

The American Bar Association has just gone on record in favor of a public hearing to test the fitness of any candidate for a Federal judicial post. This will enable the Senate to determine whether or not such appointee is, or has ever been, affiliated with the Ku Klux Klan. Public opinion unanimously condemns any present members of the oath-bound order as being unworthy of any high Federal office, deeming the two oaths of allegiance as being incompatible, but will it not be willing to grant amnesty to repentant Klansmen?

Justice Black is now securely ensconsed in his seat on the Supreme Bench, from which no procedure is likely to dislodge him. Is it not, therefore, the part of sane judgment and enlightened common sense to regard the incident as closed.

KELLY MILLER.

Washington, Oct. 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To one whose forte is neither politics nor religion, the Monday morning papers are a revelation.

It always has been my impression that when one sallied forth Sunday morning in one's best bib and tucker the purpose was solely to gather manna for the sagging spirits and not to sit through and listen to a political harangue.

It is something less than virile to hide behind ecclesiastical robes, fortified by an opinionated congregation and stone walls and lash about verbally in an attempt to sway people in things political. When religion raises its "ugly head" —and it has been raised down through the ages—I'll be found registered with the Klansmen, if needs be. Their camouflage seems less reprehensible. LELIA KESTLER.

Washington, Oct. 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in the Sunday's issue of The Post on our new Klan justice was greatly enjoyed in our home.

Relative thereto may I quote from the Book of Wisdom, "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

Winchester, Va., Oct. 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The American Bar Association wants their stamp of approval on all Supreme Court judges in the future, the utility corporations would like the same.

President Roosevelt and the people want only just decisions from the Supreme Court, and that laws made by the 400 able lawyers chosen by the people in the Senate and House shall not be declared unconstitutional by five judges.

The inmates of our prisons would like to choose their wardens, but that also would be contrary to good government. JOHN RIGGLES.

Seabrook, Md., Oct. 4.

From the Detroit News.

Your Slip Is Showing, Mister!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If Mr. Black is not opposed to Jews, Catholics and Negroes, why did he join an order which has that opposition as one of its fundamental principles?

Perhaps his reason for joining was that he was running for office in his native State and it was very desirable to have the support of the Klan. Also his resignation came, as he was working for membership in the Senate. If this is not true why did he not state that he joined because he approved of the methods of the Klan, and resigned when he became convinced that its methods and practices were vicious and unlawful? Thus we could have felt more respect for and confidence in him. Is a man who would use these means to get an office fit to hold a place in the Supreme Court of the United States? "Temperament is but a palisade, character is a stone bastion."

FLORENCE S. AUGUSTE.

Washington, Oct. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Justice Black in his radio address made the really splendid declaration that—"the Constitution is the supreme law of our country. The Bill of Rights is the heart of the Constitution."

But less than several years back, when head of what was then termed —"the Black Inquisition," did he not cause thousands of telegrams to be secretly seized from the Washington files of the telegraph companies? Were not these snooped into and pawed over in fishing for any persons who had expressed sentiments contrary to the New Deal, so they could be put through the Black Inquisition? Was not his action at that time not only unconstitutional, but a direct stab at the Bill of Rights —"heart of the Constitution?" Was not one of the auricles of this heart the provision for "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures."

That comparative recent attack at the "heart of the Constitution" was quite on a par with the high handed, illegal methods of the Ku Klux Klan, of which he was once admittedly a member.

The facts of the matter seem to be that when the Klan dominated Alabama politics Black sailed with the majority and thus got into the United States Senate. But when it became obvious that whatever political asset it might be in Alabama, it was only a liability in the Nation as a whole, then Black soft pedaled his connection with it and now repudiates it altogether.

Let us hope that our new associate justice has experienced an honest, sincere change of heart, that beats in true rhythm now with the "heart of the Constitution" as well as with his $20,000 salary. It was a real miracle of religion when the persecuting Saul of Tarsus became the Saint Paul of our Christian faith. Mr. Black must of course now be accepted into the Supreme Court. Nevertheless there may be many of us who disbelieve that in his case there will be any miracle character change. A lot of us still feel that he is like a black fly that has got into the ointment of supreme justice. HENRY D. BAKER.

Durham, N. C., Oct. 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The long Stygian silence is broken at last by etheric emanations from the Cave of Darkness by ex-Klansman Black, now associate justice in a $17,000,000 palace on the face of which appears the legend: "Equal Justice Under Law!" The faithful old kitchen drudge, the Daily Press, could not be trusted to carry the emotionally surcharged "explanation." No indeed, psychology indicated to the dignified justice that only the radio could be trusted to put the proper quiver into the phrases that cold type still leaves cold and unconvincing.

What real liberals are interested in is not so much whether the justice was a Klansman and wore the spooky robes, but why he joined the Klan. His psychology at one time must have made him sympathetic to the ritual and its concomitant hates. His "answer" would have been more illuminating if he had traced the psychological complex which caused him to choose the line of least resistance to win fame and favor, yea even to election in the august Senate, while a few valiant spirits like Underwood went down to defeat because they had the courage to defy the Klan in its stronghold.

If Underwood and other brave men had not exposed the Klan in the hey-day of its power, we today in America would have been under a Nazi or Fascist regime. The Klan stood for fascism in America long before it had its birth in foreign countries. In the Senate, Mr. Black did nothing to help the anti-lynch bill. It is all very nice for Mr. Black to expatiate now upon his love for the black man, the Jew and the Catholic. The Klan is no longer a force to be reckoned with politically. But there was a time when it took courage and manhood to defy it and expose it in the South.

It is easy when one craves one of the highest honors in the land to avow love for American principles and label himself a "liberal." In a period when liberalism is popular, as it is now, it is all very well to profess it. But fascism exists today in certain parts of the South. Our new associate justice points to his record of progressivism. Does that progressivism proceed from conviction and fly courageously in the face of persecution and possible assassination as opposition to the Klan once meant? Or does it proceed from political expediency, the line of least resistance? How far could Mr. Black have gone in the ass' skin of a reactionary?

What real liberals want, Mr. Black, is a thoroughgoing analysis of why you ever joined the Ku Klux Klan, if you are a real liberal at heart. Millions of honest everyday Americans never had and never will have any use for secret organizations based on principles that dishonor and deny the Bill of Rights of the United States Constitution which you now are entrusted with protecting. ARISTOTLE.

Washington, Oct. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our New Deal friends have undertaken to prove that red is green and gray is no color at all. The skies may not be gray now, but black clouds are rolling up. With a $40,000,000,000 debt hanging over and a 20 cent dollar in prospect, the outlook is anything but promising.

A gifted debater can take the wrong side of a question and win over a less talented opponent who is on the right side. F. D. R.'s Constitution Day address has all the lawyers beat to a frazzle when it comes to hedging, hair-splitting, quibbling and straining at a gnat. "He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument."

If the court has been intimidated, and such appears to be the case, it amounts for a time at least, to the same thing as a packed court.

L. G. HIGGINS.

Linden, Va., Sept. 30.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: During the Roosevelt-Hoover campaign Mr. Roosevelt very often referred to Mr. Hoover's acts as "Humpty Dumpty," but now in the last few months Mr. Roosevelt has found a plaything; it is very old and untarnished and on the back it has two letters—SC.

The President has done a Humpty Dumpty act on this plaything and tried his best to break it up into 12 or 15 pieces, but no go. He even went so far as to call in his man Friday, better known to us as "Two-Job Farley." But Two-Job Farley was too busy looking for a stout cord to tie up his bag, from which several things have slipped lately.

Now Mr. Roosevelt's plaything will go back on the bench unbroken, but I wonder if we can say untarnished? JASON CASKEY.

Fairfax Va., Sept. 29.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Referring to your article about the late Chief Justice White being a member of the Ku Klux Klan from 1910 to 1921. If he was a member of such organization (the old Klan), all informed persons well know the sole purpose of such organization which was formed just after the Civil War—in the reconstruction days—was to protect the decent white people of the South in their constitutional rights against the hordes of unscrupulous "carpet bagger Yankees" who invested the South and preyed on its splendid citizens. JAMES LARKIN.

Washington, Oct. 1.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your editorial, dated September 30, "Silence Is Golden," you mention the fact that Mr. Black emphasized fear of being misquoted. The tiny word no leaves little opportunity for misquoting, when definitely expressed. Aside from this, the fact remains that Mr. Black is not very complimentary to the press, and there still remains the fact in many minds that the press has been and is too lenient in the handling of Presidential news.

Somewhere, some place, someone ventured forth with the news that Mr. Roosevelt wished to avoid the Black homecoming. Whether or not this is correct, I, personally, think that it would not only have been an economical, but also a convincing gesture, taking into consideration Mrs. Roosevelt's spectacular and courageous work among the colored people, had she remained at home to greet the new justice and his wife.

It, evidently, is as difficult to sort out the lambs and the goats, when feeling revengeful, as it is for Mr. Black to say an emphatic no.

M. GORDON.

Washington, Sept. 30.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to protest against the insincerity so often evident in your paper's attitude, the most recent example of which is the way you have played up the Justice Black affair. Some weeks ago you editorially contrasted Black's nomination with the nomination of Brandeis, implying that Roosevelt could with profit take lessons from Wilson. Now wouldn't you be opposing Brandeis if he were nominated today and wouldn't you welcome his resignation if there were some means of obtaining it? [Ed. note: The answer is no, in both cases.]

If you really hate vigilantism as much as you say, why do you not campaign against it whenever it appears? The Klan is not as strong as it once was and is generally recognized for what it is, yet it draws a hundred times the condemnation meted out to those recently arisen vigilante groups in Michigan and Pennsylvania which specialize in diverting reasonable motives into sinister channels. J. H.

Washington, Oct. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The strictures expressed by Mr. Pegler with respect to lawyers in your columns of October 4, while severe are, like all other generalizations, not wholly true.

These spicy observations, whether of men or events, serve worthwhile ends in that they direct attention to many important subjects to which we do not ordinarily give much thought. Some lawyers not only recognize the shortcomings of their clients but likewise are cognizant of their own foibles and failures. This writer in a magazine article in Temple Law Quarterly for April of this year, writing on the subject of "The Lawyer and Corporate Clients," felt justified in making this observation:

In reading some of the circumstances surrounding receiverships and corporate reorganizations hereafter briefly recounted, one wonders if the canons of bar ethics are worn only as sleeping garments and left in the morning in the bathroom along with the night's growth of whiskers.

In the same article, I quoted from Alexis de Tocqueville, who writing of lawyers in America just 100 years ago, said:

I am not unacquainted with the defeats which are inherent in the character of that body of men; but without this admixture of lawyer-like sobriety with the democratic principle, I question whether democratic institutions could be long maintained, and I cannot believe that a republic could subsist at the present time if the influence of lawyers in public business did not increase in proportion to the power of the people.

And then this philosopher sets forth his considered conclusions with respect to courts of law in the following words:

The strength of the courts of law has ever been the greatest security which can be offered to personal independence; but this is more especially the case in democratic ages; private rights and interests are in constant danger, if the judicial power does not grow more extensive and more strong to keep pace with the growing equality of conditions.

Then this prescient philosopher lays his crowning bit of wisdom as his concluding contribution to posterity from his years of study and as a product of his prophetic capacity concerning democracy in America:

The nations of our time cannot prevent the conditions of men from becoming equal; but it depends upon themselves whether the principle of equality is to lead them to servitude or freedom, to knowledge or barbarism, to prosperity or to wretchedness.

NATHAN BOONE WILLIAMS.

Washington, Oct. 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I and other former and present members of the Ku Klux Klan have been insulted by your editorials and by Pegler. We who know the Klan know the things you say are untrue. But you are misinforming and misleading those who don't know.

I knew many splendid men in the Klan, men prominent in public, professional and business life as well as ordinary workmen. I was secretary of a nearby Klan for several years and never was anything unlawful done or suggested. We did a lot of good and helped the poor regardless of race, color or creed. I never saw a Klansman intoxicated. We did not persecute, but we were persecuted. AN EX-MEMBER OF THE KLAN.

Bar None

By Bett Hooper

"This Must Be The Place."

"YOU SHOULD," says Ernest Hemingway in his introduction to "This Must Be the Place," "expect to be able to go into a saloon or bar and pay for your drinks without appearing in the bartenders' memoirs and I was shocked and grieved to hear that Jimmy Charters was writing his."

That is rather a strange statement, coming from Mr. Hemingway. Strange in view of the fact that he apparently didn't consider it shocking to incorporate as many as half a dozen of his friends around this same bar in a book of his entitled "The Sun Also Rises." But Hemingway, like his fiction characters' prototypes, soon recovered from the peeve. It may take the reader longer to forgive Jimmy Charters for telling his life story as a Montparnasse bartender to Morrill Cody to be put into book form.

Personally, I could bear up quite bravely if he did no more than expose the frailties and ofttimes annoying habits of some of our best writing people, such as James Joyce, Sinclair Lewis, Ezra Pound and Ford Madox Ford. This business of putting personalities into print is a respectable and time-honored one. But it seems unforgivable when that same biographer takes two characters out of one's favorite piece of fiction and gives them substance by pointing out that they're actual people. And yet that is exactly what Jimmy Charters does in the case of Mike and Lady Brett Ashley, those two swell people who hold one's interest through 259 pages of "The Sun Also Rises." No wonder Montparnasse was at one time gossiping about the "characters in search of an author"—with a gun.

• • • •

MIKE, ACCORDING to Jimmy the Barman, belonged to an old Scotch family prominent for many generations in British history. The Lady, Brett, was also blue-blooded and had been married for a brief time to a young English lord. But she was separated from him before she met Mike. Brett, according to Charters, was always "dressed neatly in somewhat masculine clothes," and held her "bobbed head erect." Hemingway didn't bother to improve on her. "Brett was damned good-looking," he wrote when he fictionized her, "She wore a slipover jersey sweater and a tweed skirt, and her hair was brushed back like a boy's."

Like the Mike and Brett in the book, the actual Mike and Brett spent most of their waking hours with one foot on a bar. That is, when they were sober enough to put one foot anywhere. But unlike the Hemingway hero and heroine, the human lovers did not have a happy ending written for them. For after the real Brett had secured a divorce to marry Mike, he transferred his affections to another girl. So Brett consoled herself with marriage to an American and is said to be living somewhere in Greenwich Village today. Mike took veronal, thus adding finis to a lifetime which hadn't seemed to stand for anything particularly significant anyway.

• • • •

"I'm going back to Mike," said Hemingway's Brett. "He's so damned nice and he's so awful. He's my sort of thing." And it was rather a comforting thought, when one read the book back in 1926, to think that she did just that. And now comes Jimmy Charters and rattles the skeletons in the novel, giving them life and at the same time failing to make them as lifelike as his patron, Mr. Hemingway, did. But, enough of Mike and Brett. After all, there were lots of other famous folk who patronized the bars of Montparnasse.

• • • •

THERE WAS, for instance, Ford Madox Ford, who was somewhat of an Elsa Maxwell when it came to organizing fun. Every Tuesday he used to rent a workman's dance hall near the Place de la Contrescarpe and invite all his Montparnasse friends. One night he offered a prize for the best poem to be submitted to a jury and the prize was a home-made cake. Alas, the jury could not agree; no decision was reached for days; and when the award finally was made, the cake was as hard as a rock!

Stevens, author of "The Crock of Gold," once left the manuscript of a new book on a table where he had been drinking. Strange tip for a waiter to find! But one did and upon returning it to Stevens, all the reward he received was a kiss on both cheeks.

Montparnasse saw but little of Sinclair Lewis, who did not care for the crowd which frequented it. And the Quarter did not waste any love on him either. One night Lewis "swore himself both a better stylist and psychologist than Flaubert and was silenced by a 'sit down, you're just a best seller!'"

This, indeed, must have been the place where everyone went and everything happened. The legends of Montparnasse are no stranger than the personalities who frequented it. What Jimmy Charters terms "the education of a barman" makes fascinating reading. Gertrude Stein, Isadore Duncan, Sylvia Beach and Jean Cocteau have been subjects for many biographers. But this is probably the first time that they have been seen and recorded by a bartender. The result—a champagne cocktail!

"THIS MUST BE THE PLACE," Memoirs of Jimmy the Barman as told to Morrill Cody. (Lee Furman, $3.)

A Prize Novel

By William Lyon Phelps

"The Turning Wheels."

"The Turning Wheels" is the name of a new British novel by Stuart Cloete (pronounced Clewty), which has just been awarded a big prize.

The author was born in Paris, educated in England, and lived for 15 years in South Africa, where his Dutch ancestors were in 1652.

He entered the war when 17 years old; was severely wounded, fixed up and went back to be more severely wounded; no one could possibly doubt his courage or his experience; he would be an interesting man to meet, if, like Othello, he would talk about his adventures.

This novel is described as "A novel of violence and passion, of Kaffir-killing, child-bearing, Bible-searching, and irrepressible love, the story of the Great Trek of 1836 to the Transvaal," etc. This is a fair and generally accurate description, though I am not quite sure about "love."

• • • •

And that is exactly why I am not enthusiastic. A great many characters are brought into the story, men and women; but they seem to me to be only animals. They illustrate the animal instincts of selfishness, greed, murder, jealousy, lust; but they reveal no traces of intelligence; the nearest they get to that is a kind of low animal cunning.

The continued violence of the action becomes monotonous; a little thinking, a little good conversion, would be a welcome relief.

Black Ouster Now Unlikely, Foes Concede

By the Associated Press.

Many opponents of Justic Hugo L. Black here agreed yesterday there is slight chance of removing the former Klansman from the Supreme Court, but they clung nevertheless to three admittedly forlorn hopes.

The first was that the court itself might hold Black ineligible for his present office under the ouster action brought yesterday by Albert Levitt, former Federal Judge in the Virgin Islands. The second was impeachment. And the third lay in invocation of a little used legal device known as an "extraordinary writ of quo warranto."

Impeachment Unlikely.

The general expectation in the Capital was that th ecourt would dismiss the Levitt proceedings without comment when it meets again next Monday, together with a similar action brought by Patrick Henry Kelly, a Boston attorney.

Washingtonians generally saw little prospect of impeachment proceedings.

Levitt has said that, if the court turns him down on his motion, he has a second course in mind. This may be a "quo warranto" proceeding.

It is a process provided by law for preventing an individual from occupying or attempting to occupy a public office illegally. Only an "interested party" may resort to it, and it has been established that "interested parties" include only officers or agencies of the Government.

Senate Might Act.

However, a private citizen may request formally that the Attorney General institution such proceedings, if refused, then apply to the courts for a writ of mandamus compelling such action.

The Supreme Court began its secret consideration of more than 400 petitions, including the two challenges to Black.

The conferences, held in a closely guarded room at the rear of the court chamber, will continue on Thursday and Saturday.

Some Washingtonians prefer to ride the taxis not merely because they're so cheap here, but because the taxi drivers are such charming and gifted conversationalists . . . They can, in the classic phrase, talk about anything . . . They strike me as a rather pessimistic lot, embittered by a life of clashing fenders and nickel tips.

A taxi driver it was who told me that the silk-hat classes are just jealous of President Roosevelt, because of his charm, high spirits and popularity . . . "They'd forgive him a lot if he looked like Calvin Coolidge," he said, neatly sandpapering a passing limousine.

Another Tory story, no doubt—if you've heard it, try and stop me—is about the picnic the Roosevelts threw for the newspapermen at Hyde Park, a few days after the white robing of Justice Black . . . It was on a Friday and the food was mostly ham sandwiches and pork and beans—which meant that quite a few of the journalists ate lightly.

* * * *

And next day, the story goes (you can believe it if you want to—I don't), the Roosevelts' neighbors, the Morgenthaus, also threw a party for the press . . . It was on a Saturday, and the piece de resistance was clam chowder . . . Why is it that the severest critics always tell the best stories about an administration?

Another quaint slant on Mr. H. G. Wells' request for a $3,000 fee to lecture to Washington's Town Hall, when he visits at the White House, is that Englishmen around town vow that in London he'd be delighted to take 60 pounds, or $300 . . . Well, he's worth all he can get, say I.

Wages Board Ponders Cost Of Clothing

Conference Later Is to Suggest Minimum Salaries.

The question of how much a woman must pay to appear well-dressed came up before the retail trade conference of the Minimum Wage Board last night with the employer groups illustrating their beliefs in the matter through the use of living models.

Last night the conference, which will later recommend a definite minimum wage for girls employed in local stores, considered the cost of clothes and the necessary number of each article that a girl ought to have in her wardrobe.

After employes and employers had submitted their separate estimates of the sum required to purchase a year's supply of coats, skirts, brassieres, blouses, girdles, panties and other accessories that complicate Kipling's "rag and a bone and a hank of hair," John J. Esch, venerable chairman of the conference and representative of the public, summed up the male point of view rather neatly.

"Some of these things are beyond my depth," said he. Then he pushed his glasses up on his forehead and admitted he was the father of five daughters.

Feminine Viewpoint.

On the other hand the viewpoint of the eternal feminine that lives in every shopgirl came out, with a touch of pathos, perhaps, in the statement of Mrs. Irma Ketchem, a representative of the employe group.

"We feel that a girl ought to have one dress that she feels dressed up in," she said. "She ought to have one dress that she doesn't have to wear to the store."

The employers figured that a yearly allowance of $19.85 for winter dresses would be enough to get a girl by. The employes said that winter dresses would cost at least $29.85. They calculated it this way: Two dresses at $5.95 one at $7.95 and one "dress-up" dress at $10.

Summer dresses, the employers thought, should cost a total of $11.80. The employes disagreed. They said a girl needed two $1.95 dresses, one at $2.95 and another at $5.95, and a dress-up dress costing $10.

In some cases the employes showed they would rather have a few higher-priced articles than many of an inferior grade.

Hats, for instance. There wasn't much difference in the total estimates. The employers throught $8.80 enough for a year's supply; the employes said $8.85. But the girls figured that three would be enough while their bosses had allowed for four.

Objection Heard.

It was on this point that a member of the audience rose to his feet and objected. He was Joseph W. Leverton, former proprietor of a G street women's ready-to-wear store. He asked:

"Are you endeavoring to see how cheaply you can dress a woman or are you trying to find out how nice she can look?" He pointed out that the dress of salesgirls is in itself an advertisement for a store.

Both employers and employes considered that a heavy winter coat ought to last two years. But the employers thought that such a coat should cost only $29.50. The employes had submitted a $39.50 price.

To support their contention the employers had four girls parade before the conference wearing winter coats they had purchased in local stores. None cost more than $29.95. One, worn by Elizabeth E. Malamphy, a stately brunette, was of heavy beige wool, lined with rayon satin. It had a raccoon collar.

Another, a plain one without a fur collar, provoked a comment from Mrs. Ketchem. "I'd call that a work coat," she said, intimating that it wasn't the sort of coat that could be worn to a party.

It was explained that the models had bought their clothes at local stores, all having first been told to adhere to the budget submitted by the employers. Arrangements have been made to send the garments back.

Agree on Hose.

Both the salesgirls and their employers agreed on the number of pairs that are necessary each year. Both said 24. The difference came in the price. The employes said they needed 89-cent stockings, claiming that those gave better service. The employers decided that 69-cent stockings were adequate. The yearly budgets were: Employers' estimate, $16.56; employes' estimates, $21.36.

Another element of humor came in when Miss Malamphy was asked by a woman member of the conference to display her hose.

"Don't embarrass me," she pleaded. "They belong to my roommate."

When the matter of slips was brought up and the girls said they needed four annually at a total cost of $7.80, J. M. Hemminger, a Woolworth store manager, countered with—

Girl Names Shoebills 'Worry' For It's What They Do to You

Post Contest Brings in Novel Appellations for Zoo Inmates.

"I think," writes Bettie Huidekoper, "that 'Worrier' and 'Worry' are good names for the shoebills as shoebills will worry you, especially if you have a large family."

Well spoken, Bettie, and good luck to you on your name suggestions for the Zoo's new pair of shoebill storks. But why didn't you do what so many other entrants in this Animal Names Contest are doing, namely, send in nominations for several of the new specimens?

Take 11-year-old Dorothy Day, for example. She didn't stop at one animal or a pair of them, but made her 2-cent stamp carry more than a dozen proposals. "Ebony and Eve" would do fine for the black leopards, she thinks, and "Tony and Norma" are her suggestions for the unnamed pair of giraffes.

Dorothy would like to call the Komodo dragon "Jibilee," the new orang utans "Mimi" and "Noah," and the pair of pigmy buffalo "Tiny Tim" and "Patty Cake." But here now, Dorothy, you've put down "Suzie" for the lady orang utan. Don't yon know the Zoo already has a lady orang utan of that name? Don't you think their mail might get mixed up?

E. C. K. draws upon history and the comic strips for his (or her) preference. "Genghis Khan" is his choice for the male Sumatran tiger, "Xerxes" for the clouded leopard and "Toots and Caspar" for the pair of leopard cats.

There is still plenty of time to get in your name suggestions for the animals mentioned above, as well as for the Komodo dragon, Chinese alligator, pair of king cobras, pair of Himalayan bears and any of the other specimens brought to Washington by the National Geographic-Smithsonian expedition, with the exception of one pair of giraffes, the male orang utan and the Sumatran tiger kitten.

They were named "Nicky" and "Spring Song," "The Wrestler" and "Hari," respectively, long before the collection reached the Capital.

Name the Leopards

Having a black cat cross your path would be unlucky, indeed, if it happened to be one of the other of these fierce, but magnificent, leopards which were presented to National Zoological Park by the Crown Prince of Johore.

All the other lions, tigers and jaguars in the lion house are appropriately named but the prince's gifts, along with the rest of the big cats which arrived from the East Indies last week, are still called nothing more distinctive than "kitty kitty."

How about it? What do you think the pair of black leopards, husband and wife, should be named? Write your suggestions below and mail ballot to Zoo Names Editor, The Washington Post.

HomeInfluence HeldCorrective ForChildCrime

A significant proportion of crime is the result of antisocial development of adolescent mentality for the home is as much the corrective as it is the origin, was the view expressed last night by Dr. Ernest R. Groves, research professor at the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Groves, who chose as his subject "The Home and Crime," spoke under the auspices of the Institute of Criminal Science in a series of 28 lectures given at the Wardman Park Theater.

Reminding his audience that "the part of the parent is the greatest of all social parts," Dr. Groves said that "if nomalcy flows out of the father and mother it reflects itself in the child; if not, then we have a potential criminal or neurotic."

"The child lives according to the influences showered upon him during his formative years. If he is a criminal in the family as far as disposition is concerned, he merely carries over that criminal attitude into later life," he said.

Dr. Groves divided the character building drama of the child into three parts. First, the child takes attitudes about things surrounding him. Then he discovers that people mean more to him than things. Lastly, there is the problem of contact with himself.

In all three stages there is the danger of extremes. The overly aggressive child, the child who uses people for his own predatory ends, the frustrated child who rebels, become embryonic criminals, while the child who shrinks from people as well as things develops a neurosis.

Dr. Groves stressed the point that the wealth, intelligence or social position of the parents are not proof against maladjustment in the child unless normalcy flows out of their own lives and they are able to check extremes.

The speaker was introduced by Patrick B. Kelly, director of the Institute of Criminal Science. A panel discussion followed, with Mrs. Walter B. Fry, president of the Parent-Teachers Association of the District; Mrs. Frank E. Linzel, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs of Washington, and Morris A. Klass, director of Jewish Social Service Agencies, participating.

After withdrawing about $500 from his bank account, leaving a balance of 64 cents, John N. Tolson, 48, of 312 E street northwest, drove off into Alexandria traffic yesteray morning and disappeared.

Tolson, who had been in bad health for two years, is the manager of the Alexandria Wall Paper Co. His wife, Mrs. Lola Tolson, said yesterday that he informed her he was going to the bank to withdraw funds for the payment of outstanding bills and that he planned to see his doctor on the way home.

A son, Frank, 19, and a stepson, Edgar Dowell, 24, also live at the E street address. They are both employed by the wall paper company.

Woman Reproved For Her Applause At Court Verdict

A woman in red was made an example of in Judge Charles W. Woodward's Montgomery County Court yesterday.

She was among those who applauded when James E. Spiller and Leithan Bradley, both of Bethesda, were acquitted on charges of robbery with a deadly weapon, as the aftermath of a poker game. They were alleged to have held up three men with whom Bradley had played poker and shot craps, and recovered the money that Bradley lost.

So popular was the verdict that the spectators in many parts of the courtroom applauded. The woman in red was the only one Judge Woodward could single out.

He ordered her to approach the bench. When he had tried another case he told her she was the only one he could identify, and therefore he would release her, despite her "improper conduct" without fine.

1 Md. County Shows Way to Better Roads

Washington County Highway Improvements Remove Many Hazards.

Commission Chairman Points to Lack of Funds for Conditions.

The State of Maryland once possessed finer highways than any other State in the Nation. Now, because of political bickerings and executive red tape, she stands twenty-fifth on the list. Believing that safety ought to stand ahead of the interests of politics, The Post presents today the fourth of a series of articles explaining the situation.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 5.—This Western Maryland county, where two of the East's major areteries of travel—the National highway (Route 40) and the Shenandoah trail (Route 11) intersect, has seen more major highway improvements and hazard elimination in the last two years than for almost a decade.

Dr. Homer E. Tabler, chairman of the Maryland roads commission, who is also a resident of this county, commenting today upon these will shortly be instituted during improvements which have been or his regime, said that the roads commission has been concentrating upon its arterial system of roads, of which Route 40 through Washington County is one of the most important.

"We are confronted by direct competition from two directions—Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The former is concentrating upon Route 30, the latter State on Route 50, and it behooves Maryland, if it is not to lose the heavy tourist trade which it has enjoyed for years to meet this competition by improving this and other transcontinental arteries which pass through the State.

Two Projects Completed.

Two major projects aimed at the elimination of traffic hazards have been completed on route 40 west of Hagerstown. A new steel and concrete bridge across conococheaque Creek, 9 miles west of Hagerstown, was completed this year. This not only eliminated two grades and three sharp curves, scenes of numerous accidents in recent years, but also will prevent traffic stoppage during flood times in the Potomac River Valley. The highway at this point was blocked by high waters during the flood of two years ago. The other major improvement was at Huyetts Crossroads on Route 40, 6 miles west of here where 2 miles of concrete road, much of it relocated, eliminated at least eight curves and improved vision at the intersection of Route 40 and the Williamsport-Green Castle pike.

Dr. Tabler announced that a contract will be let this month for another major improvement on Route 40, at Licking Creek, 17 miles west of here, where a new concrete and steel bridge, 300 feet in length will be started this month. The highway at this point will also be relocated to eliminate three sharp curves and a hazardous grade.

To End 'Death Curve.'

The way has been cleared for the start of a fourth project on Route 40, 5 miles east of Hagerstown, at a point known as "Death Curve," which gained its name because of numerous fatal accidents at this point. The State ha spurchased a section of a farm and will relocate this road for a distance of a half-mile.

Youth, 19, Admits He Stole Jewels

Arrested when he attempted to sell a ring worth $400 to a pedestrian for $10 yesterday Raymond E. Doolittle, 19, was found to have more than $1,000 worth of jewelry in his pockets.

Doolittle told police he went to the home of Mrs. E. Briggs, 326 Braddock road, Alexandria, Va., to ask for food and when he found no one home, broke into the house and took approximately $1,200 worth of jewelry. According to police, the boy ran away from his home in Edmonston, Md., after the recent death of his mother.

Alexandria police took the boy in custody and charged him with grand larceny and burglary.

Expert in Documentary Films Visits This Country As Aid to the Museum of Modern Art Film Library

Paul Rotha, Artist, Author and Authority on Films, to Spend Five Months on This Side; Mickey Mouse Has a Birthday; Judges for One-Act Tournament; Stage Stars Coming; Civic Theater Launches Drive.

THE Museum of Modern Art Film Library, 14 West Forty-ninth street, New York, is making handsome progress in its task of assembling an authoritative celluloid record of the complete history of the motion picture.

BELL.

Having made a formidable collection of significant films tracing the development of the cinema across the years, this adequately endowed organization now has brought Paul Rotha, internationally famous authority on the films, to this country from England to devote five months to the compilation of documentary films on the technique of motion pictures, which will be employed to supplement the program notes on film technique issued by the Film Library and written by Iris Barry, Curator of the Library and motion picture critic of many years' standing.

Mr. Rotha also will assist John E. Abbott, director of the Film Library, and Miss Barry in a course on "The History, Aesthetic and Technique of the Motion Picture," given by the Film Library for the Department of Fine Arts, Columbia University, consisting of 28 3-hour classes, held weekly in the projection room of the library. A lecture tour through the country likewise has been arranged for Mr. Rotha.

Born in 1907 and educated at London University, Slade School of Art, Paul Rotha is a painter and designer who has held many exhibitions on the other side, in addition to having taken his place as one of the world's foremost exponents of the documentary film as a permanent commentary upon the interests and activities of his time. He, furthermore, is the author of many standard handbooks upon the development of the motion picture as a new art form of illimitable scope.

His half-year of productive effort in this country should add appreciably to the films' historical importance in the United States.

Mickey Mouse enthusiasts—and that modestly embraces everyone who ever goes to a motion picture theater—will have their fill of the rascally little rodent this week-end. In celebration of Mickey's ninth birthday, Loew's Palace Theater is presenting another of its matutinal performances this Saturday at 9:30 o'clock, at which time as many Mickey Mouse subjects as can be gathered together within the specified running time will be shown. Doors will open at 9 a. m., and a uniform admission price of 25 cents will be charged. Beginning Friday, at RKO-Keith's, Mickey also will supply one of the principal supplementary items of the bill supplementing Nino Martini's new starring vehicle, "Music for Madame," in "Hawaiian Holiday," first of a new series of Technicolor releases in which Donald Duck and Pluto also appear. This little Mickey fellow, by the way, has developed from a mere animated line-drawing into a definite personality—which is more than can be said of some living screen actors who might be named.

The committee in charge of the District of Columbia one-act play tournament, conducted under the auspices of the Community Center Department, announces that the three judges for the five preliminary contests to be held in Roosevelt High School Auditorium on October 12, 14, 16, 19 and 21 will be Richard Westwood, Caleb O'Connor and John Hoffman.

Mr. Westwood is editor of Nature Magazine, was formerly engaged in newspaper work in New York and prior to that was active in college dramatics. Mr. O'Connor is director of the School of Speech in this city, a former radio announcer for N. B. C. and a prominent local drama director. Mr. Hoffman is a professional actor who lived for many years in Washington and always has taken a keen interest in the one-act play tournaments.

The judges for the finals, to be held at Roosevelt on Saturday night, October 23, in conformity with a long-standing custom—don't ask me why—will be the drama editors of the five local papers. The local papers, incidentally, again will contribute the $100 in prize money to be distributed among the winners—$50 to first, $25 to second and the remaining $25 to be divided between the remaining finalists.

Also pursuant to custom—and this one isn't so bad—at a date to be announced after the conclusion of the finals, a tournament dinner will be celebrated, at which much timely persiflage will be tossed about, along with the hors d'oeuvres. And if that last tray of tasties is misspelled, you can blame Mr. Webster.

That is quite a stage show the Earle management has rigged up for the week beginning Friday, October 15. It will be headlined by Carmela Ponselle, prominent American mezzo, who will be making her second appearance on Thirteenth street. An added attraction will be Mayris Chaney and Edward Fox, known as the favorite dancers of the White House, who will be assisted by Camille De Montez. The third inclusion of importance will be Roy Smeck, "wizard of the strings," who frets fretted instruments by making them do things they never did before. The Olympic Trio, shrinkingly heralded as "aristocrats of dexterity," which might be any one of a variety of things, will complete the bill.

There is apt to be hair-pulling and throat slitting any minute now. It seems there is a campaign chart hanging on the wall in the Washington Civic Theater office in the Raleigh Hotel, showing the relative standings of teams that are working their heads off to put the Civic Theater over the top in its drive to enlist 2,000—count 'em, 2,000—subscribing members for the coming season. The atmosphere is charged with political electricity.

Team captains come in, glance at the chart, react appropriately, according to the standing of their teams, and face about to head back to the wars. If the teams are 'way up there, Campaign Manager Robert M. Miller beams at them. If they are trailing too far behind, he gets out the old head protector and shin guards and delivers himself of a pep talk with all of the smoky words.

At this writing the teams of Ione Jordan, Bess Wilkirson, Yvonne Kushner, Dorothea Lewis, Frederick Rand and Ted Tenley are in the lead, but others are nipping at their heels and results fluctuate by the hour.

Once the public gets the idea, the 2,000 subscription goal should be easy to cross, for the Civic has real excitement and entertainment to offer at subscription rates that are practically the same as giving them away. That office in the Raleigh is in Room 122.

Funny thing about "Vogues of 1938," Walter Wanger's eye-filling, Technicolor filmusical at RKO-Keith's. Probably because of that word "Vogues" in the title, this elegant entertainment latterly is playing almost exclusively to feminine audiences. Male theater patrons are cheating themselves by staying away in droves big enough to fill Griffith Stadium. Maybe that is what they have been doing. At any rate, the net result, insofar as Keith's is concerned, is that there remains a vacant seat next to each distaff member of the audience where, ordinarily there would be an escort. This being the case, Manager Hardie Meakin is yanking "Vogues" tomorrow night, supplanting it Friday with Nino Martini in "Music for Madame," with tunes by Rudolf Friml and such of them as aren't sung by the star being warbled by Joan Fontaine, described as "Hollywood's newest and most sensational feminine star." Maybe that will get the men—and their wives, too, to watch them.

'This Way, Please,' They Call It

Whether the title of "This Way, Please," Paramount's new musical vehicle for Charles "Buddy" Rogers and Betty Grable, refers to the smiles or the abbreviated toggery of this quintet of curvy, young coryphees is left to the judgment of the reader. From left, down the steps, they are Suzanne Ridgeway, Laura Knight, Joyce Mathews, Aileen McEvoy and Helaine Mohler, not that it matters. "This Way, Please," you will be glad to know, will be coming along some time this month.

WHENEVER NOEL COWARD sends telegrams to his friends he seldom signs his own name, but uses a gag name . . . Last week he sent a wire to Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne and told the operator "sign it 'Mayor LaGuardia'" . . . "We can't do that," the operator informed. "We are not permitted to sign the name of a prominent person unless that person dictates the message himself" . . . "Well then," Coward sighed, "sign it 'Noel Coward'" . . . "But I've just told you our rule about that," the operator protested. Mr. Coward, however, was able to convince her that he really was Noel Coward . . . "In that case," the operator returned, "it will be okay to sign the wire 'Mayor LaGuardia'!"

JOHNNIE WEISSMULLER, who worked for Billy Rose all last summer at the Great Lakes Exposition in Cleveland, returned to Hollywood, where his friends kidded him about his having been employed by Rose. Weissmuller was quick to rush to the producer's defense . . . "Billy is a great guy and honest," he declared, vehemently. "He's very, very honest, and I had no trouble at all with him . . . Besides, I had an iron-bound contract!"

VITTORIO E. DE FIORRI, MUSSOLINI'S biographer, will publish a monthly magazine here to be called Italy in America. Il Duce's ministers of education and agriculture, as well as the editors of his newspapers in Rome, will help edit this publication . . . The newspapers published the photo of Danielle Darrieux, the French movie star, arriving on the Normandie with her husband, Henri Decoin. Although the captions referred to the man as her husband, the gentleman with her was the French consul general. Miss Darrieux will make a personal appearance at the Filmarte Sunday night, where she's appearing in "Mayerling" . . . Sam Goldwyn, breathing defiance, rushed from his office shouting: "I'm going to face him—face to face!"

THIS WEEK the Postoffice Department was puzzled in handling 3,000 brochures, displaying a Hammer and Sickle, containing a reprint of the Daily Worker's editorial announcing the eighteenth anniversary of the Communist Party in America . . . "Mr. American," was the message above it, "if you have opinions about this, get in touch with us" . . . The brochures required rerouting, because they had been sent under the wrong class of mail. The postal authorities sent for the Daily Worker officials, who obligingly attended to the rerouting . . . although the brochures had been mailed by the Constitutional Educational League in New Haven—an anti-Red organization!

THE INTERNATIONAL CASINO show finally is working. It's the most spectacular cafe revue Broadway ever has seen . . . Bea Lillie was screen-tested yesterday. She looks so young that Bing Crosby wants her for his ingenue . . . Heywood Broun, in his Thursday column, wrote about Jeremiah T. Mahoney, candidate for Mayor, called him a stuffed shirt and attacked him in other respects, too. Broun wrote that column in the office of Collier's, 'on the typewriter' belonging to Quentin Reynolds—who was described in that column as Mahoney's favorite nephew!

IT'S ALMOST definite now that Robert W. Ohlforth, who was the investigator for the La Follette committee, will take McGrady's place as Assistant Secretary of Labor . . . The magazine Re-vue is no more . . . The Rockefellers may sweep clean the Fifty-second street night-club belt. They expect to extend Rockefeller Plaza from Forty-eighth to Fifty-fourth street and have acquired most of the necessary property.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 5.—This afternoon, on a studio set, I heard one of our newer stars make a fool of herself. She had seen the "rushes" of yesterday's scenes, decided one of the minor players in the cast was being given too many good breaks, and was furiously accusing the director of trying to "build" the other girl's role in order to dwarf her own. The director patiently tried to explain that the minor part, though brief, is a motivating factor in the plot and that it must be stressed for the sake of the picture as a whole. He might as well have tried to reason with a sulky mule.

NORMA SHEARER.

That little sap is sentencing herself to quick oblivion. Young, beautiful, talented, she is shy on brains and too egotistical to profit by the mistakes of the other saps who have gone before her. A good picture is a composite of great performance by everyone in its cast. Even a simpleton should be able to realize the need for building every role in a picture to its full value.

Norma Shearer, William Powell, Paul Muni, Joan Crawford . . . any one of those long-lived favorites battles in behalf of their supporting players. They want every part accented as strongly as possible because they realize that good pictures guarantee the permanence of their own success. They know that if a star gets the credit for a smash hit, he also gets the bulk of the blame when he appears in a picture that is a flop.

He stood just outside the Cafe de Paree, that famous commissary of Twentieth Century-Fox—a grimy-faced, stoop shouldered laborer, clad in dirty overalls. I saw several of the studio's lesser beauties pull their skirts closer as they crowded past him. "Yeah," he said to the pal who was with him, "I used to eat in there—all dolled up in a monkey suit and so broke I didn't have two dimes to jingle. I played bits—worked one week and loafed the next. Always hoping for a break—and never getting one. Maybe I averaged 30 bucks a week—maybe less—and I spent every cent I could get on clothes. It's the b'nk!"

Guild Premiere Reveals Novel Dramatic Form

By Nelson B. Bell

"MADAME BOVARY," The Theater Guild presents Gaston Baty's dramatization of Flaubert's novel, in 3 acts and 18 scenes, adapted and directed by Benn W. Levy. Settings and costumes designed by Lee Simonson from original Baty production. Play under the supervision of Theresa Helburn, Lawrence Langner and Benn W. Levy.

In a series of 16 striking vignettes, each as clear-cut as the cameo etchings of incidents in the life of Her Majesty, the Queen, in "Victoria Regina," "Mme. Bovary" plucks from the Flaubert novel the most vivid facets of the tragic story of its heroine's disillusioned life and loves.

By the deft implications of a novel form of stage presentation, the classic French story of life in the Normandy of the early nineteenth century is condensed into briefly illuminating flashes of the career of a young woman of romantic dreams and poetic imagination whose quest of their fulfillment pursues a sinister course as poignant as any Juliet's.

The proscenium's customary lapses of time are bridged by the judicious utilization of the stage boxes as a sort of celestial retreat for six of Emma Bovary's "school companions," who serve as a kind of modernized Greek chorus, voicing first the thought and conscience of the former chum, in whose life they saw such promise, and again their own observations of the dubious progress of her affairs of the heart after marrying a country-bumpkin doctor incapable of a warming human emotion.

The device is an economic and effective one that carries the action of the drama into the auditorium of the theater and thus produces the feeling of intimacy, as well as the element of surprise, always engendered by such innovations.

The Theater Guild, following closely the pattern drawn by Gaston Baty in his Parisian production of his own dramatization of the Flaubert novel, has seen fit to content itself with an episodic recital of the disastrous flirtations of Madame Bovary, as must be patent from the very considerable number of silhouettes into which the three acts have been divided. The decision was an admirable one, resulting in a tersely written study of a bewildered life, devoid of lengthy and impassioned apostrophes, superfluous embellishment and the attenuation of dramatic suspense. Each scene ends with a "curtain" of crisp and adequate significance, with Emma's tragic determination upon self destruction reserved for the final climacteric incident.

While there are occasional minor defects in character drawing—as in scene IV of act 2, for instance, when Mme. Bovary reveals a sudden and inexplicable revulsion of feeling toward the husband whom she had egged on to do the very thing that prompts her vituperative outburst—"Madame Bovary," in the large view, is a skillfully peopled play. There are moments when it seems more Anglo-Saxon than Gallic, but those fleeting deviations from a rigid authenticity may be easily erased.

In the title role, Constance Cummings, better known to Washington as a screen player than as a star of the living theater, reveals mature accomplishments as an actress. Her characterization fell into harmony with the moods of the multiple scenes of the drama and increased in effectiveness as it proceeded.

The actors assigned to the principal male roles have been especially well chosen. Ernest Cossart, the officious and highly competent general factotum of the town, by self-appointment, makes of Homais, the apothecary, a fine symbol of bombastic comedy. Four players new to the American stage create an impression of no less favor. They are Carl Harbord, Leon Depuis, O. Z. Whitehead, Justin; Maurice Manson, as Girrard, and Ernest Thesiger, Lheureux, Emma's persistent Nemesis. Harold Vermilyea's Charles Bovary is wholly in the earthy manner of a medical incompetent and Eric Portman is a properly despicable Boulanger. The minor roles are consistently well taken.

Rotary to Hear 'Co-Op' Pioneer

A strong supporter of the co-operative plan whereby chain stores work with growers to move surplus crops into consumption, Doe has been with the Safeway organization since 1919. The Sanitary Grocery Co., is the eastern subsidiary of the corporation.

"Work In Your Own Backyard," will be the title of Doe's address today with a discussion of modern merchandising policies and the development of modern distribution facilities. Soundness of the farmer-consumer plan was evidenced when more than 37,000 chain stores subscribed to the plan and in 1936 disposed of the largest grapefruit crop in history.

Oldest employe with the Safeway organization, in years of continuous service, Doe is also international president of the Safeway Employes Association and vice president of the National Association of Food Chains.

Ticket Drive For Lunch Fund Launched Here

District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen's purchase of the first lunch-fund boxing carnival ticket yesterday officially launched the city-wide sale of admission to the event.

Commissioner Hazen indorsed the project heartily and congratulated the Citizens' Emergency Committee for Feeding Hungry School Children on the venture.

"Purchase of one general admission ticket," Chairman Frank Buckley of the fight committee said last night, "will insure the feeding of one needy school child for three weeks. Purchase of two tickets will feed a child for more than a month, and purchase of a dozen tickets will defray expenses of one child for nearly the entire school year."

General admission tickets, priced at $1, may be obtained from policemen and firemen and at Turner's Arena. They also are on sale at Ahearn's Men's Shop, 500 Ninth street northwest, or at Griffith Stadium the night of the fight.

Sergt. John Agnew has been appointed chairman of the policemen's ticket committee, and Chief Charles E. Schrom is handling the sale for the Fire Department. About 16,000 tickets have been turned over to them.

At a committee luncheon at Opportunity House yesterday, Arthur Clarendon Smith announced a businessmen's meeting to be held Friday at 12:30 at the Harrington Hotel. Service clubs, businessmen's clubs and citizens' associations have been asked to send representatives. Between 300 and 400 are expected. They will discuss what contribution they can make to the lunch drive.

Developments expected today are a report from Superintendent of School Frank W. Ballou on the number of children who need free lunches and a decision from the Board of Education on the projected series of benefit magic shows.

The most recent endorsement the committee has received came yesterday from the Communist Party of Washington. M. Chancey, city secretary of the group, wrote Mrs. John Boyle, jr., organizer of the drive, "endorsing the work undertaken by you and your socially-minded fellow citizens." "It is indeed encouraging," the letter continued, "to see the people of our community responding to this most urgent need of our city. In this endeavor you have our complete support."

The communication concluded with the statement that the lunch problem is "a Government responsibility." The organization feels that "the District government must secure or appropriate sufficient funds to supply our children with food, nor should this appropriation be at the expense of the already inadequate general relief funds."

Ranger With Mosby Dies After Brief Illness in 91st Year; Funeral Services Scheduled Tomorrow in Andrew Chapel M. E. Church.

Nelson Follin, 90, one of the two Confederate Army veterans resident in Fairfax County, died yesterday at his home, Magnolia Glen, at Colvin Run. He was born August 20, 1847, in the house in which he died, and where he spent his life with the exception of his war service. Until his final illness, Follin was active in the management of Magnolia Glen, a farm of more than 200 acres.

In the War Between the States, Follin enlisted in 1862 in Maj. White's squadron of Gen. Rosser's brigade of Virginia cavalry. He transferred later to Col. John Mosby's Rangers and served the last two years of the war in that famous cavalry organization, being wounded in action.

For years an enthusiastic and energetic member of Marr Camp, United Confederate Veterans, of Fairfax Court House, Follin took a prominent part in the exercises June 1, when a monument to his former commander, Col. Mosby, was dedicated at Fairfax. He also participated a year ago in the re-enactment of the Battle of Manassas.

The veteran was an ardent Democrat and took an active part in county politics. He was 42 years a justice of the peace of the Providence district.

Funeral services, which will be conducted by a friend of long standing, the Rev. Charles Compher, of Newmarket, Md., will be held at 2 p. m. tomorrow at Andrew Chapel, M. E. Church South. By his own request, Mr. Follin will be dressed in his old Confederate uniform. Burial will be in Andrew Chapel Cemetery.

Seven daughters, two sons and seven grandchildren survive. The children are the Misses Hattie E., and Eva Follin and Mrs. Cora Hall, of Colvin Run; Mrs. W. C. Balderson, Mrs. John Callahan, Mrs. J. L. K. Lane and Mrs. G. W. Swing, of Washington, and Walton, of Washington, and John R. Follin, U. S. N., now aboard the Santiago.

5 Held, Trucks Are Crippled in Transfer Strike

Ignition Wires Cut as 100 Walk Out Here for Higher Pay.

Five men were arrested, three held and charged, keys were yanked from ignition switches and, in some instances, truck wirings were cut as more than 100 employes of the Merchants Transfer & Storage Co., 920 E street northwest, struck for higher wages and a 48-hour week yesterday.

Those charged were James Rucker, 37, of the 900 block of Twenty-fifth street northwest, charged with assault; David A. Moorman, 22, of the 400 block of Riggs road, and John Henry Lucas, 33, of the first block of G street southwest, charged with destroying private property.

Throughout the day police cars dashed to all sections of the city on the plea of the company that strikers and sympathizers were interfering with the firm's operations. The company delivers for many retail establishments here, including one of the city's largest department stores.

Squads of men cruised the city in automobiles seeking to induce drivers to join the strikers. In many cases they took the ignition key or cut wires when they refused.

Demanding a $27.50 weekly scale for drivers, $21.60 for helpers and a 48-hour work week, more than 100 employes of the company, affiliated with Teamsters Local No. 639, struck Monday, said Charles Bell, delegate for the union.

Having no agreement with the union, the company has been paying drivers $15 to $19 and helpers from $9 to $12, Bell asserted. He said the men often have to work 88 to 90 hours a week.

Strictly Autumn Motif to Feature Decorative Scheme for Affair; Kay Cody, Mayfair Songstress, Has Enviable Record.

The "champagne and orchids" opening of the Mayflower comes off Friday night with the smart after-darkers looking after their reservations right now (call Teddy). Special entertainment as usual has been signed by Manager Pollio for this gala annual event and those who again will make the Mayflower's lounge a rendezvous will find Claire Willis performing regularly with the orchestra.

The decorative motif will be distinctly autumn, with the room in general turned into one huge "mum" exhibit. Since this fall opening is a sort of "Mayflower family affair" an atmosphere of informality will predominate. Even the brass hats and big-wigs who attend take down their back hair a bit.

For Friday's gala opening, Pierce and Boland, society dance team, have been signed for the piece de resistance, featuring cyclonic routines which have won them favor in New York's ultrasmart set. Miss Willis, fresh from successes at the Rainbow Grill, Stork Club and other top-flight spots in New York, is known as the "lilting linguist of song." She will be presented nightly from 10 to 2.

Sonny Kendis is renewing many acquaintances with Washingtonians who danced to his music at the Stork Club in New York. The maestro of the Raleigh's Pall Mall room is a native of Philadelphia, studied law and gave it all up for waving a baton. Has a knack for getting the tempo of his music from his audiences. He also plays for luncheon guests and at the cocktail hour, after 5.

Tonight is "Big Apple" night at Wardman Park's Metronome room, which also is "Big Apple" night at Radio City's Rainbow room. Incidentally, the Metronome room has been re-roofed, so to speak, with acoustical tiles. You get the nicest effects imaginable. Paul Kain and his music nightly.

Kay Cody has come to the Mayfair with an enviable record of entertaining the people. She played and sang with Vallee at the Astor Roof, with Guy Lombardo at the Ambassador, and on the air with Dick Himber and his ork. Kay is a harpist and songstress. She is the big surprise Dick Byrd has been concealing from his faithful partons for several days. Welcome, Kay, to Washington.

The Three Ms, known more formally as the Three Merrymakers, are rounding out six months at the Hi Hat (Ambassador Hotel) this week. A nasty old rumor got abroad that they were leaving and Manager Con was beseiged by customers, who said, "Let it not be so." They're staying right on.

Something bewitching about the Shoreham's new Blue Room—very elegant, too, in contrasts of blue and red. The opening nighters last week ah'ed and oh'ed all over the place. A light-fusing system sends an unusual amount of clear light into even the most remote corners of the room, but with all, the softness and mystery of diffusion is predominate. The Shoreham Revue clicked again with the first-nighters, with John Barker, the Shoreham chorus and Maxim Lowe's music with Barnee, the perennial maestro, at the helm.

On the floor of the Lotus this week we have Barry and George Sharp and Kirk, Joey Dean, Buddy Shaner, Marion Dawn and Earl Lindsay's Minstrel Show. The eight lovelies of the chorus execute most intricate Merry Widow tap, William Tell and novelty rope numbers. Al Norton introduces every one and Bill Strickland and his boys provide the dance music for the customers.

No word yet as to when those band stand changes are to be made at the Madrillon, but spies report the program is under way. The immediate change in appearance at Peter Borras' popular spot is winter dress by members of Johnnie Shaw's gang. Tuxedos, as it were.

The Troika, with the lovely Helen Hamilton again the boss, opens next Tuesday night. Newcomers to Washington will be interested to know that Helen Hamilton's Troika is one of the nicer places to go. Russian to the last bit of braid on the doorman's uniform. Phone for reservations now.

Evelyn Knight and Johnny Slaughter's Novelty Trio are on deck at the Annapolis' Anchor Room every night. For those who like a pleasant spot for relaxation and a nautical atmosphere. . . . Another novelty stunt is being cooked up at Boulevard Farms, which also cooks up some excellent chicken dinners. Boulevard Farms, down the highway below Alexandria, brought the Big Apple to Washington in a big way. You Big Apple here every Friday night. Dave Epstein is the cheer leader.

Halloween is expected to be celebrated, insofar as after-darkers are concerned, Monday, November 1. The formal street fun will be Saturday night, but the hotel, restaurant and night club parties will be Monday night, when the likker curfew doesn't ring at midnight. . . . Joan English and Bill Barry for your entertainment at the King Cole Room at the Claridge. . . . Brand new show at Bamboo Gardens, beginning today. This is the new gathering spot at the old La Paree location. Very pretty it is . . . Brinkley's tells us that the new ork at this popular Southeast spot is a Sidney unit.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My son, educated and refined when in his right mind, is addicted to the use of intoxicating drink. He is entirely controlled by the habit; so much so that it has prevented him from being employed and thereby deprived him of opportunity to make his way in the world. I have done all I can to show him the error of his ways. I have appealed to his better self when he is not under the influence of alcohol and he has acknowledged its harm and promised to give up drinking. Yet it seems impossible for him to keep his promise. What can be done to help him overcome this terrible habit?

• • • •

Some time ago, I noticed that you had given through your column the address of a physician who treats persons for this habit. Now, will you tell me what effective course to pursue in helping my son? Is there an institution to which he can go for treatment? He has too fine a personality to have it destroyed entirely by the use of intoxicants. Thanking you for any suggestions, I am, gratefully yours.

DISTRACTED MOTHER.

DEAR DISTRACTED: Never, at any time, have I published in this column the name of a physician who treats alcoholics. Many physicians may do so, but it is my understanding that the medical profession itself regards chronic alcoholics as being primarily in need of psychiatric diagnosis and treatment. Alcoholism is an abortive effort on the drunkard's part to take flight from a world of reality to which he finds it difficult or impossible to adjust, into a world of phantasy where everything is rosy and the drunkard himself—while his intoxication lasts—sitting on top if it. There are as many obscure mental and emotional reasons for a drunkard's being a drunkard as there are drunkards themselves. Only a skilled analyst can get at the root of the individual drunkard's irresistible appetite for drink.

• • • •

Psychiatrists will support me, I believe, in saying that only a drinker who urgently wishes to be cured of the habit can be cured. No one can thrust a lasting cure on him. He must recognize his predilection for the bottle as a curse; as an illness; and so fervently yearn for release from enslavement that he willingly undergoes the tedious process of first getting acquainted with the painful truth about his lazy or cowardly or hurt or frightened or emotionally twisted inner (or subconscious) self; and, secondly, re-educating himself, socially and emotionally, along more acceptable, more constructive lines calculated to bring him self control, self respect, contentment and material success.

• • • •

William Seabrook's "Asylum," a widely discussed book of a few seasons ago, told the author's own story of his long struggle with drink and his eventual mastery of the habit, achieved in a State institution for the mentally ill to which he had himself committed. By reading the book, you might get some helpful ideas to apply to your son's case. You might persuade him to read it; it's just possible he might be inspired to go and do likewise. There is more than one sanitarium in the vicinity of Washington which specializes in the treatment of alcoholic cases, and there is a ward in at least one local hospital. However, I believe you should have a specialist's advice before proceeding that far with plans. Why not take your problem to Dr. Elmer Klein, phychiatrist with the Washington Life Adjustment Center, 1464 Columbia road northwest? He can tell you where to go and what to do, and may even take the case himself. M. H.

Wants Poise, Serenity.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 26 years old, have been married seven years to a devoted, understanding husband, and have an adorable little son. My trouble is that I am highly nervous and inclined to become morbid about myself when left alone for very long. Also, I have an unfortunate way of saying the wrong thing to people most of the time. I don't seem to have the ability to make friends easily, and then, too, people seem to exhaust me. I have consulted several doctors but they tell me I am physically sound, so it must be my frame of mind which makes me unhappy.

• • • •

My husband makes friends easily and seems to know how to hold them. Oddly enough, he and I think alike about most things, but he gets his opinions across so that they sound different. I was reared in an orphanage, while he had a happy, normal home life, which may account, in part, for our social dissimilarity. I never had anyone to really love me until I met him, so he is everything in the world to me.

• ½ • •

We love to spend our evenings reading, but we don't read anything to really improve our minds. I feel that I should start reading something to improve my personality and give me some help in my English. I had one year's high schooling, but I want my son to go much further than that. I want to acquire more poise and self confidence. Can you advise me?

MARY K.

Some Suggestions.

DEAR MARY K: Some time ago I chanced upon a copy of David Seabury's "Helping Yourself to Happiness," an entertaining volume which ought to prove interesting and really helpful reading matter for you. I imagine you can find it at any good bookstore or at the public or Congressional libraries. Anne Tillery Renshaw, a Washington woman who has a school of speech here, has written a book entitled "Well Bred Speech," which gives invaluable suggestions for developing an easy conversational style. She lists words and phrases commonly misused and supplies the correct alternatives; stocks the reader's vocabulary with many useful words which he may have forgotten or possibly never knew; and relates certain fundamental rules which make for pleasing social discourse. There is considerable philosophy and social wisdom in this slim little book; and I believe you would derive both pleasure and profit from reading it time and again.

• • • •

If people exhaust you it is probably because you are afraid of them, in the sense of being desperately ill at ease in their company, and this largely because you believe you are making a poor impression or none at all, or possibly antagonizing them. This sense of inferiority no doubt stems back—just as you guess—to a loveless childhood. Those years of emotional suppression may have set up a glandular disturbance which is working havoc with your psychic health today. If general practitioners have pronounced you physically sound, why not see an expert diagnostician who will look more deeply into the cause of your very real trouble? Such symptoms as you describe often spell functional illness.

• • • •

In other words, prolonged mental or emotional strain of one kind or another may have upset what, normally, is the harmonious interplay of those glands whose secretions directly affect one's vitality and personality. Correct this condition through expertly supervised glandular medication and you automatically attain greater vitality, a more pleasing personality; social life appeals rather than appalls; and you blithely shed that morbid inclination to brood in retrospect over every word and gesture of your own and other persons.

• • • •

As you probably know, it is a serious mistake to lean too heavily upon one other person, even though that person happens to be a devoted and dearly loved husband. By looking to your health, and at the same time extending your reading to include matter of a psychological "know thyself" nature, I am sure you can work out of your present clinging, nervous distress into a greater serenity, charm and happiness. M. H.

Best Soup Recipe Will Win 3 Prize In Post's Contest

Have you sent in your recipe for soup? These cool October days make your household soup conscious. While you are looking through your special recipes, select one for The Post's Favorite Recipe Contest. It may win you a cash prize of $3.

The favorite soup in Washington seems to be a toss-up. For years, the old-fashioned vegetable soup that fills the kitchen with fragrant goodness has taken the lead. Now there appears to be a preference for vegetable bisques, corn chowders, oyster stews and filling alphabet soups. Which type of soup does your family prefer? Let us hear about it.

To win a prize in the contest, write out your recipe clearly, giving exact directions for its preparation, and mail to Miss Jean Green, The Post food editor, before Saturday, October 9.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Oct. 5.

SOMETIMES senility seems to be coming on the dead gallop. Never have I been so conscious of the Leap of Time as this fall, whenever I see the freshmen groups noted as the Class of '41! Ye unmerciful gods! Just imagine—41 years of this dizziest of centuries already well in sight! It's too much!

ALICE HUGHES.

This was newly hammered into my head as I visited ye dear old campus up at Columbia University, in the heart of Manhattan, just to see the fresh-girls at Barnard College settle into the traces for their first year at the Fem Sem. I must have witnessed 300 girls, and I must admit that they seem a gayer, snappier lot than my gang, way back there in the dawn of recorded time. Barnard, under the guidance of brilliant and active Dean Virginia Gildersleeve, who has ruled that pullet-roost almost since the Columbia Lion was a squealing cub, has an honored place in the scholastic sun. Socially, a metropolitan college presents interesting variants from many of the famous Young Ladies' Seminaries.

• • • •

Vassar, for instance, rests in many wide acres above the Lordly Hudson. Most of the others have broad fields, green pastures and woodland paths. But dear old Barnard's campus consists of three blocks of New York City, which it shares with the clear-eyed, clean-cut men of Columbia College. Not much chance there for the Good and More Abundant life while soaking up book-learning, eh? From the Barnard campus a strong sophomore can hit Broadway with a field-hockey ball, and probably maim a traffic cop, too. Thus the struggles of Barnard misses for freedom are faintly tinged with paths. They adore and flee to a tiny green spot back of Barnard Hall, called "The Jungle," where there's no ban on smoking! Isn't that sort of sad? I think a college girl should get out of the city!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Sheila Barrett, queen of upper-crust night life, opens tonight at the John D. Rockefeller Saloon and Dance Hall, the Rainbow Room, with a fresh line of acid character-creations and malicious mimicries. The big girl, I believe, holds all records for repeat engagements at the sixty-fifth floor boozing den.

Few realize, perhaps, that Mainbocher, the Parisian dressmaker who is now running up much of the winter wardrobe of Her Grace the Duchess of Windsor, is an Iowa boy. Yes, sir—a product of the corn country, who worked in New York for some years in the fashion business before he went to Paris, fame and fortune.

Well, everything is all right now. The incomparable Kirsten Flagstad arrived safely on the Europa the other day, fit'n ready to open her mouth and bathe us once more in glorious Wagnerian sounds from that magic throat. The world, heaven knows, is tough enough, but a Flagstad certainly helps out!

• • • •

Every year, amid the myriad events of the town, we have an Indian convention here, at which a small group of noble redmen gather to survey the mad island their ancestors frittered away centuries ago. This year's meeting was terribly tame, with many dull orations and no scalpings at all. Chief Littlemoose, a Chippewa from Minnesota, ably presided. The few squaws present had nothing to say, in the fine old Indian tradition.

Into the world of frozen fruits and vegetables now bounces that dainty, much-prized by some, the heart of the artichoke. The frozen hearts are all done up in cellophane, and are said to hold the flavor right doggedly. I'd rather wrestle a grizzly b'ar than an artichoke, so I happily hail this new onrush of science. Unfreeze me an artichoke heart, Mamie, and let's munch!

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain.

A CURVE IS the loveliest distance between two joints in the streamlined figure. There is a difference in curves, however, and all beautiful figures are not streamlined according to the same scale, as you can see from a comparison of Mae West with other famous figures.

In movieland, where gorgeous figures are the rule, there is an exceptionally wide range of lovely measurements. Take the willowy figure of the beautiful and blonde Virginia Bruce, for example. Miss Bruce is 5 feet 6½ inches tall, and weighs 128 pounds—all in the right places. She is a perfect 36—bust, 36 inches; waist, 27½ inches, and hips, 38.

Miss Bruce, so I'm told, does nothing for beauty quite a bit of the day. She is a natural-born relaxer and has a peaches-and-cream complexion that is the reward of a serene disposition. She does not diet. She enjoys a hearty breakfast, omits lunch, and eats a good dinner at night. Tennis, golf and cycling keep her figure trim.

The famous Mae West figure has a different set of curves: Bust, 37½ inches; waist, 29½, and hips, 37½ inches. I'll have to go up and see her exercise some time. Miss West concentrates on a figure program for waist, hips and back, keeping the hip and bust measurement the same—which makes a fine figure of a woman.

June Lang, who has been dubbed the modern Venus because of her perfect form, is one of the most active young ladies in Hollywood in outdoor sports. She plays a lot of tennis, swims, and is very fond of bicycling and walking. June is 5 feet 3½ inches tall and weighs 104 pounds. These are her measurements: Bust, 31½ inches; waist, 25; hips, 36½ inches.

Dolores Del Rio, internationally famed for her lovely figure, personifies the streamlined ideal. This exotic brunet is 5 feet 3½ inches tall and weights 115 pounds. It's dancing that keeps the Del Rio figure lithe and perfectly proportioned. Look at this set of measurements: Bust, 34 inches; waist, 24 inches, and hips, 35½ inches.

As you can see from a comparison of these figures, beauty is not to be standardized. What these stars have in common is a proportionate difference between measurements and the fact that they all work—or play—to keep their perfect proportions. No woman can have a lovely figure unless she exercises—not even a movie star!

Placid Expression Is Advised As Aid to Routing Wrinkles

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

"IF YOU WOULD attain and keep an unfurrowed brow, free from wrinkles and crow's feet, wear a placid expression and keep your skin well oiled." This is the advice of Angela Varona, widely known cosmetician, who is in Washington for several days.

Women should be kind to their faces and give them much more attention than is the usual custom, Miss Varona contends. "You can change your clothes at will, and slim down your figure to streamlines," she said, "but your face still remains the most important part of the entire ensemble. It is your 'face value' to the world, since it is really the mirror to your character and emotions.

Skin breathing is one of Miss Varona's pet theories! that is why she doesn't believe in the usual idea of leaving cream on the face all night long. "It has been proved," she said, "that creams and lotions are absorbed by the skin in from 10 to 15 minutes, so why leave them on longer. They only clog the pores and prevent the skin from breathing properly." In the matter of soap and water, she believes that it all depends upon the type of skin you have—for oily skins, such treatment is often necessary.

Eyes Require Care.

Eye care and make-up is extremely important, not only because of the face-revealing hats this season, but because they can "make or break" the entire facial appearance, according to Miss Varona. Eye pads dipped in hot water and then in cold, followed by special cream, placed around the eyes and on the lids, should be a daily ritual with every woman, regardless of age, she says, and and eye shadow should be considered as important as lipstick in the make-up, even for daytime.

"The double chin is generally a question of posture," said Miss Varona, "and if your body and hear ear held properly, your throatline should be smooth and boast of one chin only." Here is an exercise she recommended, which not only strengthens the throat muscles, but in turn is good for the entire face. Drop the jaw, throw the head back, open the mouth and shut the teeth (at the same time, smile), then throw the head forward, chestward, shut the mouth and relax. Astringents, too, are advised by her for tightening muscles under the chin and firming the flesh.

Fall, Winter Make-Up.

Make-up for fall and winter has come to mean just that, literally, Miss Varona explained. "Women are using more cosmetics this season, to cope with the brilliant colors and glittering fabrics; this is particularly true for evening. How about the woman with gray hair?" she was asked. "I always advise women to keep the hair gray, once it has turned," she answered, "and tell them to adopt a smart coiffure, keep the skin well-oiled and in good condition, and add more make-up, than when the hair was dark or blonde. Light foundation creams or lotions and light powder are usually better than dark tones for the gray-haired woman."

Miss Varona, who is a striking woman with gray hair, a lovely skin and looks at least 20 years younger than her actual age, is a splendid example of the effectiveness of this procedure.

Trinkets Relieve Dark-Hued Frocks

Paris, (AP).—The little things that will brighten dark-hued winter suits and frocks are claiming attention in Paris shop winows, where gay boutonnieres, colorful clips, watches on fobs and unusual brooches are featured among novelties for the coming season.

Chanel, continuing the patriotic motif which took the fashion world by storm this summer, presents a miniature French flag in red, white and blue baguettes for the lapels of autumn suits.

Schiaparelli suggests that the smart young woman tie up her boutonniere with her perfume, and makes them with sprays of flowers matching those which top the attractive bottles of her "Shocking" perfume. Birds of bright plumage, featured in the winter collection of that house, make unusual clips shown in the accessory shop.

A New Gold Compact.

Sustaining the regal elegance of the year's coronation celebrations, a new gold compact has been introduced, decorated with Heraldic ermine tails of white. A band of black enamel lends a smart touch to the cover, which is so constructed that it may be worked easily and without fear of breaking fingernails. These compacts come in the usual double and single versions, for either cake or loose powder.

Notable Audience Sees Theater Guild Opening

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Out of the confusion caused by postponing the opening of the season's first Theater Guild play, came a spirit of cooperation from subscribers exceeding the fondest expectations of the management, as men and women who always reserve the choicest seats took almost any that were available in order to see the play as soon as possible.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Thus the drama subscription project planted several years ago in Washington by two society women, Mrs. Sidney Thomas and the former Miss Katharine Dunlop—now Mrs. Langhorne Bond—came to full blossom last evening when a brilliant audience saw the Theater Guild's first offering of this season—"Madame Bovary," the tragic drama of a nineteenth century woman and her husband.

For a full half-hour before the curtain went up, long, sleek cars, one after another, pulled up in front of the National Theater, depositing men and women whose faces have been glimpsed at many a play opening in the Capital. Later, when regular subscribers and others had found their places inside the theater, old friendships were renewed and new acquaintances made in a manner quite in keeping with a plan designed to provide "the same seats for the same night" during the drama season. Although this rule had to be discarded to some extent last evening, there were enough of the regular Monday night and Tuesday night subscriber present to make the event something of a "family affair."

Audience Represents Cross-Section of Society.

Since the weather was not all that might be desired for an opening, "dress" was not the blanket rule, even for those in orchestra seats; but a sizable number of men and women, nevertheless, were in evening attire. As well as I could judge the audience, as a whole, was one of the most representative of all circles of Washington life and society that I have seen this year at the National.

Among those I glimpsed being shown down the aisle shortly before the curtain went up were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin, the latter in a frock of toast-colored chiffon and lace. A few minutes afterward, I saw Mrs. Sidney Taliaferro, who wore a gown of black crepe banded at neckline and hemline with red sequins and a lame wrap, finding her seat with Mrs. Howard S. LeRoy. Red was also part of the color scheme selected by Miss Mariana Evans, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., whose bouffant taffeta frock contrasted nicely with her blonde hair. Accompanying Miss Evans was her brother, Joshua Evans 3d.

Miss Laura Harlan, who has long been a staunch supporter of the Theater Guild came in a party of four which included Mrs. E. Newland Johnston, Miss Janet Fish and Mrs. James Helm.

"Intermission Visiting" Enlivens Evening.

Representative and Mrs. Hamilton Fish, who have been away part of the summer were on hand last evening greeting acquaintances and chatting with friends between acts. Also doing a bit of visiting at intermission were Mr. and Mrs. Jouette Shouse, the latter wearing a trim black crepe frock and a blue embroidered velvet coat.

Among the diplomats there were the Austrian Minister and Mme. Prochnik, the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza, the Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy and Donna Bianca Cugia, the Air Commodore T. E. B. Howe, of the British Embassy, and the Counselor of the Soviet Embassy, Constantine A. Oumansky.

Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, in a black evening gown, was surrounded by a bevy of friends during each intermission. Capt. Adelburt Althouse, U. S. N., and Mrs. Althouse had as their guests Mrs. Charles M. Drake and Commander V. D. Chapline, and theirs was only one of a number of parties attending the performance.

Among others glimpsed in the audience were Miss Theresa Helburn, president of the Theater Guild, who arrived in Washington yesterday from New York and is staying at the Carlton; Miss Lelia Peachy, one of the Theater Guild's strongest supporters who was there with Mrs. Cresson Newbold; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Distler, Robert Lincoln O'Brien chatting with Mrs. J. Fred Essary, who came with Miss Peggy Essary, the two looking much more like sisters than mother and daughter; Mrs. Louis Caldwell, in a black frock set off with a silver fox cape, and with her Mrs. Merritt Austin, of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. H. Rozier Dulany, jr., Col. and Mrs. James Davidson, the latter in a navy blue taffeta frock with a blue sequin jacket.

Orange Blossoms Take Social Spotlight in Capital

An important wedding of the fall season was that yesterday afternoon of Miss Priscilla Robb, daughter of Justice and Mrs. Charles Robb, of 1700 Hoban road, to Elliott Allen Billings, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Billings, of Portland, Me. The ceremony, which took place at 4 o'clock in St. Patrick's Episcopal Church, was performed by the Rev. F. Ernest Warren in a setting of palms, fenrs and lilies.

As the traditional wedding march from Lohengrin was played, the bride entered the church on the arm of her father, who gave her in marriage. She wore a gown o. ivory satin made on princess lines with a train and a long veil of illusion which fell from a Venise lace cap trimmed with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of gardenias and liles of the valley.

Mrs. Roger Robb, the bride's sister-in-law, served as matron of honor. With her aqua chiffon redingote over a pale silver gray chiffon underskirt she wore a turban of the same material, and she carried small chrysanthemums in a rust shade.

Roger Robb, the bride's brother, served as best man, and the ushers were Joseph Billings, and Elliot Harrington, brother and cousin of the bridegroom.

A reception at the home of Justice and Mrs. Robb followed the ceremony. The drawing room was decorated with palms, ferns and fall flowers in vivid hues. Mrs. Robb was gowned in periwinkle blue lace and marquisett, with which she wore a black hat.

The young couple will go tomorrow by plane to Nassau, and the bride's costume will be a light slate-blue wool frock with a coat of the same shade trimmed with gray fox. They will reside in Miami.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

MAJ. RAMON FRANCO, former Air Attache of the Spanish Embassy here, Senora de Franco, and the little Francos are established safely on the Island of Mallorca. The Spanish Lindbergh, as he has been called, is stationed at the air base there. DUDLEY HARMON.

A Washington friend of Maj. Franco recently received a long letter from the Spanish flier. "This island is so lovely," it read. "The climate is perfect, and I wish you and your wife would come visit us here. I can promise you a delightful and restful time, except, of course, when a bomb falls."

Miss Martin Begins Job as G. O. P. Aide

Democratic Women Have No Corner on Attractiveness, She Says.

Favors Wages and Hours Laws for Men and Women.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Democratic women "have no corner on intelligence or attractiveness" and there are plenty of able women in the Republican Party qualified for the Cabinet and other important Government posts Miss Marion E. Martin, assistant to the chairman of the Republican National Committee, told reporters at her first press conference yesterday. Sitting in her new office at national headquarters, she described herself as a small-town girl of good background and education but somewhat limited means, and gave a few useful pointers on horseback riding, which she taught for several years, as well as on political issues.

She made it plain her office would advocate all the planks in the party platform but was also frank in discussing her personal views. She favors wages and hours legislation without respect to whether the worker is a man or woman. The Maine maximum hour law for women and minors was passed before she became a member of the State Senate where she is finishing her second term. She is chairman of three of the important committees of the Legislature, the joint committees on legal affairs, on State prisons and on Federal relations.

Says Party Must Change Psychology.

"The Republican Party has the psychology of the administrator," she said. "It has to change and go out and tear things up."

Psychology will no doubt be employed in her part of the campaign for one of the little emblems on her charm bracelet bears the insignia of the Sigma Mu Sigma, psychological fraternity. Others are a lucky penny, minted on the date of her birth, 37 years ago, a Phi Beta Kappa key and, of course, a silver elephant.

She expects to direct her chief appeal to the women throughout the country who "find it necessary to stretch the pay envelope to meet requirements." These are the women of the Average American home, she believes, who are more interested in government than either the very rich or the very poor. She was careful to avoid the use of the word "class" in reference to any group.

"We will reach these women by showing them they have a responsible part to play in the destiny of America; not through their pocketbooks, but by principle," she said, answering the question as to whether they would be approached with promises of lower prices and reduced taxes. "They appreciate what this country has given women in contrast to what women have in those under strong centralized governments. We must keep what we have. We must preserve as well as progress, and all motion does not indicate progress."

Asked to define the difference in the two major parties, she named it as the Republican Party's philosophy of the balance of power and States' rights. The latter has become a sharper issue than ever before, and the attitude of the parties has completely reversed regarding it, she pointed out.

To Devote Time To Organization First.

Until the first of the year, Miss Martin expects to spend most of her time at her desk in Washington, laying the groundwork of her organization. She will then travel throughout the country, making contact with the committeewomen in the various States. October 18, she goes to Newark, N. J., to address the New Jersey State Women's Republican Club on "What the Republican Party Has to Offer Its Women"—a subject assigned her. The talk will be her first since assuming her new duties. Her salary, incidentally, is $500 a month.

Takoma Park Woman's Club Opens Its Season

Miss Mabel Boardman Lauds Impartial Spirit of Red Cross

Executive Secretary Tells Organization's Policy in Address to Takoma Park Woman's Club Meeting.

The impartial spirit of the American Red Cross in relieving distress in stricken areas was described by Miss Mabel T. Boardman, executive secretary of the organization in an address yesterday afternoon before the opening meeting of the Takoma Park Woman's Club. The program followed a luncheon, held at the Trinity Parish House, with Mrs. Walter P. Harman, the president, presiding.

In Spain, the Red Cross is co-operating with Gen. Franco and with the loyalist leaders, ministering to the needs of the wounded and refugees in both camps, she said. In the Far East, aid was offered to Japan, but the Japanese government replied it was organized and able to care for its people. In China, said Miss Boardman, the answer was different. There the offer of assistance was welcomed and $100,000 has already been sent into the country to help combat the plague now adding to the frightfulness of war. An agreement is being reached as to contraband of war so that supplies may be shipped with the assurance they will be used for relief purposes for which they are commissioned.

Sixty-three nations belong to the Red Cross, said Miss Boardman, through the signing of the Treaty of Geneva.

With the president and guest of honor at the head table yesterday were Mrs. Azro Cory, first president of the club; Mrs. C. B. Smith, the founder; Mrs. Frederick A. Johnston, Mrs. Jerome Hubbard, Mrs. William Stuart, Mrs. Byron Coon and Mrs. LeBlond Burdette, all members emeritus; Mrs. Lloyd W. Biddle, a past president and now president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Paul W. Burk, first vice president and Mrs. Charles S. Howard, secretary.

The luncheon was in charge of Mrs. Arthur Q. Toll, chairman of the luncheon committee, and Mrs. Jesse J. Ramsdell, chairman of hospitality. Assisting them were Mrs. J. W. Dudley, Mrs. Eugene J. Hurdle, Mrs. William Archer, Mrs. Joseph Wilson, Mrs. Vernon Auld, Mrs. John Bozievich, Mrs. Michael Cairns, Mrs. Harry Dietrich, Mrs. W. P. Duffy, Mrs. Anthony Hutchinson, Mrs. J. M. Smith, will begin its season November 11, with a meeting at the home of Mrs. Warren Wagner, and the literature committee, on October 26, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Harry Guthridge, with a meeting at the home of Mrs. D. The first regular business meeting of the club takes place next Tuesday night at the home of Mrs. Smith. The program will include the presentation of a past president's pin to Mrs. Wagner, who will talk on her recent Western trip.

Oberlin Alumni Arrange Dinner

The advent of co-education 100 years ago at Oberlin College, in Oberlin, Ohio, will be commemorated Friday by local alumni of the institution.

Exhibits at Smithsonian and the Library of Congress tell the story of the development of co-education from the time young men and women trod separate and parallel sidewalks to the present. The exhibit from Smithsonian will be on view in the downstairs grill of the Raleigh Hotel, where the alumni will hold their dinner.

From log cabin beginnings Oberlin has grown until now, with its endowment of $17,000,000, it is one of the wealthiest co-educational colleges in the United States. Founded December 5, 1833, by John L. Shippherd and P. P. Stewart, Obelin was co-ed from the beginning. A separate female department, however, was maintained until 1837, when four women were admitted to the regular college course, the first co-eds in the United States.

At present, in Washington, Oberlin is represented by such men as Judge Ernest H. Van Fossan, Claude H. Birdseye, with the United States Geological Survey, and by such women as Mrs. Elwood Street, wife of the director of public welfare.

This Morning

Just a Few Notes From New York.

By Shirley Povich.

New York, Oct. 5.—In the prize fight business they call it "putting the eye on the other guy." It's done at the weighing and takes the form of a dark expression that's supposed to forebode a murderous fate for the party of the second part. It's a quaint old custom of the prize ring first popularized by glowering Jack Sharkey and its object is to stare the other fellow into some kind of fright.

POVICH.

Well the Yankees figuratively put the eye on the Giants this afternoon when they weighed in at the Polo Grounds for the start of the World Series tomorrow. The Giants were not there to see, but the late afternoon papers bear witness that the Yankees staged an awe-inspiring parade of their battling might with the World Series only 24 hours away.

* * * *

Seventeen times a Yankee hitter pounded one of the batting-practice pitches into the far-territory seats at the Polo Grounds—swaix that tomorrow would be counted as home runs. Only two of the slugging Yankee cast failed to hammer at least one ball into the bleachers. Joe DiMaggio pounded four into the seats. So did Lou Gehrig. Bill Dickey belted three homers, George Selkirk collected two. Red Rolfe, Myril Hoag and Tony Lazzeri checked in with one.

* * * *

It was a slugging exhibition well calculated to throw some kind of a scare into the Giants, who have known all along that the item most to be feared are those Yankee home runners that may break up a ball game. It was the kind of slugging that figures to prevail against any kind of pitching, the type of swatting that carried the Yanks to victory in the series last year when kthey splattered the World Series books with a slew of new records, and there was no balm, either, for the Giants in their own final workout at the Yankee Stadium this afternoon.

* * * *

In a two-hour batting drill, no member of the Giants' cast was able to slam a pitch into home run territory. In bolder relief than ever does the Yanees' superior slugging and the Giants' pitching and defensive prowess loom as their lone hope in the series.

* * * *

On the inevitable other hand, any psychological edge the Yankees might have gained by putting on their swatting stunts on the Giants' home grounds may not be particularly terific. In fact, their slugging, aside from attuning their own batting eyes, may have been just so much wasted effort. Because it's a fact that the Giants don't scare easily.

* * * *

One need only to turn back the pages of baseball history to four years ago when the Washington Club took its pre-series workout at the Polo Grounds in 1933. On that afternoon, Goose Goslin, Fred Schulte, Sam Rice, Joe Cronin, Heinie Manush, Cliff Bolton and Luke Sewell peppered the stands with home runs. But when the series began, it was the Giants who were hitting the homers, not the Nats.

Manager Joe McCarthy was in an extremely philosophical mood today when interviewed during the Yankees' workout at the Polo Grounds. He had a smile for all and dismissed lightly the possibility that the Yankees would lose the series.

"We never let those things worry us," McCarthy said, "We know what we can do out there and things will take care of themselves once the series starts."

* * * *

Manager Bill Terry of the Giants, usually a taciturn soul who thinks baseball writers should speak only when spoken to was downright voluble today in the Yankee Stadium.

* * * *

He said "hello" to a baseball writer he had known for 15 years.

Series Stuff.

On the series scare most of the baseballs names . . . Baseball headquarters looks like a meeting of the Brooklyn managerial association alumni what with Casey Stengel and Max Carey inhabiting the place . . . Mickey Cochrane timed his docking on the Queen Mary very nicely and is here for the games . . . 350 baseball writers who will report the series in Americanese, Italian, Spanish and Japanese will be in the press section tomorrow . . . Joe Engel, who has invested his last dime in the purchase of the Chattanooga club from Washington, is a visitor . . . from the Pacific Coast has come Joseph DiMaggio, sr., to watch his illustrious son for the first time in world series play . . . with him is young Dominic DiMaggio, who is slated for a major league trial after a sensational season as an outfielder on the Coast . . . the whispering is that Willie Kamm will be drafted from the Coast league to succeed Steve O'Neill as manager of Cleveland . . . the job has been offered to Bill McKetchnie, of the Braves, but McKetchnie has not as yet accepted.

Rothrock Released.

Philadelphia, Oct. 5 (AP).—Jack Rothrock, center fielder and utility player for the Philadelphia Athletics, was released today to Indianapolis of the American Association. Rothrock came to the Philadelphia American League team early last spring from the Boston Red Sox.

Barnett Has 37 for Back Nine, Is 3d

Heavy Rain Mars Links; No. 7 and 8 Irons Used in Putting.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Wiffy Cox turned the District Open into a rout at Indian Spring yesterday and heavy afternoon rain turned it into a washout as the Kenwood mentor splashed home with a 72-hole total of 291, five strokes ahead of the field.

Walloping Leo Walper, the local P. G. A. champion, used some fine golf and a bit of strategy in finishing second, shooting 70-74 over the day's play. He wisely started early and finished just before the deluge. His total was 296.

Cox, who boasted a six-stroke lead over the field at the conclusion of the first 36 holes, increased it at the end of the morning round with a 73 and played safe in the afternoon for a 78 and the $138 first money.

Great Back Nine.

Bob Barnett, the Chevy Chase professional, was third with a 297 total, including a great back nine of 37 as the course was turned into a series of lakes and streams by the downpour. He nosed out Cliff Spencer by a stroke and Spencer was in turn a shot ahead of Roland MacKenzie's 299.

Frank Cunningham, Burning Tree, took sixth place with a 301 total, playing yesterday's rounds in 78 and 77. Volney Burnett, the host amateur ace, took first amateur prize with a 302 total, a stroke back of Cunningham, and Billy Houghton, Capitol, the only other amateur to complete his rounds, took the second amateur award at 321.

As Cox, undoubtedly the winer, and Spencer and Barnett, fighting to tie Walper for the $86 second money, started the back nine the rain poured and forced the players to putt with seven and eight irons as the already soggy greens were filled with water. Lou Worsham and Frank Cunningham were also caught in the rain on the back nine, Worsham taking 43 when a par round would have been in third place.

Cox was a stroke over par for 63 holes, but the final nine, 42, including a pair of 3 putts and a 4-putt green boosted him 7 over for the distance. It was fine golf, however, for the playing conditions that were on the dark side for the entire two days.

Walper's climb to the second position furnished the best golf of the day. His 152 total of Monday, including an 8 no the first hole, left his far in the rear. After playing the back nine first yesterday, he toured the front nine in 32 strokes, including consecutive birdies from the fourth to seventh holes.

He was in second place with a 222 total at the 54-hole mark, but appeared out of the money again as he went 4 over par on the next nine, only to return in sub-par 35, including a precious 6-foot putt on the final green for his par.

Barnett, with a 38 and a trio of 37's yesterday, nearly tied Walper with a great finish. He chipped in the hole on the seventy-first for a deuce and needed a 4 for 296. He chipped a 15-foot shot on the final green over a stream of water, the ball lipping the cup and hanging on the edge.

Spencer was consistent with 36, 37, 36 until the rain came on the back nine and he slipped to 39, including a bad tenth, or sixty-fourth hole. He played a fine approach shot on the final hole, the ball nearly skidding into the cup in 3, but he holed the fourth shot to nose MacKenzie by a stroke.

Cunningham Next.

Cunningham, tied for second after Monday's play, required 78 strokes yesterday morning but rallied in the afternoon to finish a stroke ahead of George Diffenbaugh, host pro, who was 302, with 75, 74 yesterday.

Burnett easily won the amateur award and finished in a tie for seventh with 78, 79 yesterday, added to his previous 146 total. Page Hufty, Chevy Chase, was in line for the second simon-pure prize but lost his ball on the seventy-first hole and picked up.

The remainder of the field was between 304 and 321, Al Treder at 304 with Louis Worsham, Gene Larkin 306, Mel Shorey 309, Virgil Worsham, youngest entry in the tourney, 314, including a 35 and 36 yesterday; Raymond and Gilbert Willett at 316 and 318, the latter taking 48 on the back nine after starting the day 36, 37, 36. Jack Harris was 320 and Houghton 321.

Prediction of Rain Menaces Opening of World Series Today in Yankee Stadium; Gomez, Hubbell Set to Pitch

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, Oct. 5.—Everybody but the weather man manifested the co-operative spirit today as finishing touches were applied to preparations for New York's fifth exclusive World Series, due to be unveiled tomorrow in baseball's biggest park, the Yankee Stadium.

The opening "battle of left hooks," otherwise identified as a southpaw pitching duel between Vernon Gomez, of the Yankees, and Carl Hubbell, of the Giants, presaged a long-awaited "natural" that requireed only a favorable break of weather to attract the populace in large, if not actually record-breaking numbers.

Officials of the world's champions optimistically predicted a record crowd of 70,000 fans. A "near sell-out" of reserved seats was reported late today, with 30,000 unreserved grandstand and bleacher seats, at $3.30 and $1.10, respectively, to be put on sale tomorrow morning at 9 a. m. There were plenty of reserved pasteboards available in the baseball centers despite reports scalpers were asking double prices for opening game tickets.

A forecast of showery weather, however, among other discernible factors, made it appear unlikely the series record for cash customers set at 66,669 in the stadium last year for a Sunday game, would be surpassed at the outset. The best guess was that between 50,000 and 60,000 will witness the opener of the best-four-out-of-seven whirl for baseball's biggest financial stakes.

Giants Took Opener.

The Giants won last year's opening game in the rain, with Hubbell pitching, and the second game was postponed, but all hands were hoping the getaway would not be spoiled by bad weather again.

Under overcast skies the rival squads of baseball's best-known businessman-athletes sharpened their batting eyes, on enemy territory in final tuneups for the widely ballyhooed battle of "brains versus brawn."

While the Giants went briskly and quietly about their warm-up at the stadium, the Yankees all but tore the cover off the ball and the paint off the grandstand facades at the Polo Grounds. The power that has made the Yankees firm 2-to-5 favorites to score their second successive-intra-mural triumph was in evidence, despite complaints of sore throats, head colds or other minor ailments.

This all-New York argument has been going on, at intervals, since 1921. It's all square at the moment. The Giants won the first two series, in 1921 and 1922. The Yankees won in 1923 and squared accounts last year in a six-game series.

The chief actors have changed, but the main plot remains the same. Bill Terry occupies the driver's seat once embellished by the one and only John J. McGraw, but the Giants still feature pitching, a tight defense, and "smart" baseball. Joe McCarthy has his hand on the power switch that the great Miller Huggins once grasped, but the strategy of the American Leaguers, based upon the knockout wallop, is unchanged.

Gehrig Is Link.

Iron-man Lou Gehrig remains an indestructible connecting link between the old and new regimes of the Yankees but brilliant young Joe DiMaggio, perhaps the greatest outfielder of his genration, occupies the spot once held by Babe Ruth. Surrounding these two is a cast of sluggers that has all but wrecked the American League pennant race for two straight years, battered the Giants once, and dominated the all-star proceedings.

The Yankees have met every test, repulsed every challenger. They figure to win, not alone on their run-making ability but because they have pitching forces well equipped to match the best the Giants can produce. But they've got to prove it on the ball field and there's a growing conviction, one the the series, that the Giants have what it takes to the check the World champions.

It isn't altogether a "hunch" that this is the Giant's year or that 1937 is an unlucky season for favorites. The one big season behind the strong backing for the National League champions is their superlative left-handed pitching.

Terry's strategy points toward shooting southpaws at the Yankees four times in the five games in a bid to achieve quick victory. It's the one method, the one antidote that appears mostly likely to nullfy the Yankee power typified by such left-handed batsmen as Lou Gehrig, Billy Dickey, Red Rolfe and George Selkirk. Off this year's record the Yankees, while never any part of a pushover, are less effective against southpaw than ever before.

Outside of the Yankees' own portside ace, Gomez, there are no lefties in the American League to compare with Hubbell and Cliff Melton, the sensational rookie who won 20 games in his first year and is slated to pitch the second game of the big series. After a lull of right-handed "sinker ball" pitching by Hal Schumacher in the third game, the Giants likely will come right back with Hubbell and Melton for the fourth and fifth games.

Bank on Hubbell.

This may mean too much strain for the Giants' portsiders, especially for Hubbell, who has needed more than ordinary rest between starts this season, but it's the plan of battle for the time being and, in Terry's opinion, worth the gamble for high stakes. Terry has another talented left-hander, Al Smith, for relief duty.

The one thing certain about tomorrow's pitching duel is that somebody's World Series record is going to be spoiled. Hubbell has yet to be beaten in an opening game He licked the Washingtons in 1933, the Yankees last year. Gomez has not been beaten at all. His record shows he defeated the Cubs once, the Giants twice last year, although he

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

New York, Oct. 5.—This little town of 7,000,000 souls nestling on the banks of the Hudson tonight was torn by impending civil strife that has cleft the populace into defiant camps—Yankee followers and despised supporters of the Giants.

Or so the more imaginative fans would have you believe.

But the truth is that, as the Yankees and Giants prepare to take the field on the morrow for the opening game of the 1937 World Series, little Old New York is not exactly seething over the situation.

Rain, sweeping up the Atlantic Seaboard toward New York, threw a possibility into World Series plans that the opening game, scheduled for this afternoon, would be postponed until tomorrow, when the Weather Bureau issued the following report for today: "Mostly cloudy, probable showers."

Forecasting last night that the temperature in New York will be suitable for the playing of the game, the bureau warned of overcast skies that threaten to empty upon the playing field late in the morning or early in the afternoon. Should the game today be postponed, the schedule of games would be set up a day, with the first three games listed for Yankee Stadium.

In fact, New York, seemingly slightly weary of these exclusively Manhattan World Series, is taking the thing very much in stride. The town, in it's bigness, is swallowing this World Series like something on it's daily diet. The cloak and suit business is not visibly disturbed, City Hall has not handed anybody the keys to the city as yet, hotel clerks are still polite and will give you the best in the house, and over on the East Side the strike of the Kosher Butchers is still the No. 1 topic of the day.

If there is any of the hysteria usually attendant to World Series games when they are played at other points in the major leagues, it is confined to the class of rabid and avid fans who must have their World Series. And that class won't come close to filling the Yankee Stadium tomorrow.

When Lefty Gomez steps out to the pitcher's mound at 1:30 p. m., to start firing for the Yankeess against the Giants, who will have announced Carl Hubbell as their pitcher, the batter will be gazing upon at least 20,000 empty seats.

50,000 to See Opener.

Yankee Stadium, with its capacity of 79,000, is expected to draw no more than 50,000 customers to the series opener, which is significant of the manner in which New York is hailing this World Series with its prices that range from $6.60 for the box seats to $3.30 for the general admissions.

Ticket scalping, an incurable evil of every World Series, is nevertheless a thriving business tonight. But the speculators' prices are not as fancy as in former years, with the $5.50 grandstand seats bringing only $10 in the scalping market. There ar none of the $100 offers for a pair of tickets which always marked speculators' traffic is confined to big former series. The bulk of the shots who demand choice seats at this late date and are willing to pay most any price. The lay fan can still buy seats direct from the stadium offices.

Final workouts of the two teams today at Yankee Stadium, where the Giants followed the Yankees on the field for a two-hour drill, contributed nothing that would serve to alter the series odds, which continue overwhelmingly in favor of the slugging American League crew.

Yankees Favorites.

For tomorrow's first game, despite the presence of Carl Hubbell on the mound for the Giants, the Yankees are a 2-to-1 favorite. The odds on the series remained stable throughout the day, with the Yankees quoted as 2-to-5 shots to win the championship. And betting commissioners are laying only 7-10 against the possibility that the Yankees will beat the Giants in four straight games.

Manager Joe McCarthy occasioned no surprise with his announcement this afternoon that he would entrust Lefty Gomez with the Yankee pitching duties in tomorrow's opener. Gomez, most effective of the Yankee pitchers with his 22 victories this season and league leadership in strikeouts, long has been McCarthy's apparent choice.

Thus the opening game bears the stamp of what might be an epic southpaw pitchers' battle. With Manager Bill Terry of the Giants definitely committed to King Carl Hubbell as his first pitching hope, a Gomez-Hubbell duel is the tastiest pitching dish that the mind of the most avid fan or calculating expert could conjure.

The series, even before it has started, has taken on one paramount theme: as Hubbell goes, so goes the Giants. In the hands of their screwball artist, the fate of the Giant: indubitably rests in this World Series. It is Hubbell against the Yankee sluggers and the degree in which it can stifle the American League batting barrage will govern success or failure for the National League.

It was exactly one year ago, on the wet turf of the Polo Grounds, that Hubbell beat back the Yankees in the last World Series opener with seven hits and sent the Giants away to a flying start that portended ultimate triumph. And then, Hubbell in his second start against the Yankees was beaten. That defeat whipped the Giants. If Hubbell could not beat the Yankees twice in the series, the Giants could not win.

This year, the same axiom seemingly holds true. Hubbell must beat the Yankees tomorrow and second time in the series to insure a Giant success. Young Cliff Melton, copitching sensation of the Giants, is not expected to carry the load if Hubbell fails.

Last year, in the opening game, Hubbell was the victor over Big Charles Ruffing. Tomorrow, his opening game opponent will be Gomez, but in few other respects will the series scene be changed. Only one new face will grace the starting Yankee line-up—that of Myril Hoag who has supplanted Jake Powell in left field.

The Giants, similarly, will present only one new face—that of First Baseman Johnny McCarthy, who has succeeded the aging Bill Terry, now a confirmed bench manager. It will be the series rival of 1936 meeting again with their line-ups virtuallly a carry-over from that struggle when the Yankees won in six games.

Hubbell on Spot.

Hubbell is indisputably the man on the spot tomorrow. It is he who is being asked to silence the most dangerous array the big leagues have known. Confronting him in the batter's box will be the dynamite-laden bats of the Yankees' Joe DiMaggio, their Bill Dickey and their Lou Gehrig. In the second line of fire will be four other Yankees who can break up the game with a home run, perhaps, two; George Selkirk, Tony Lazzeri, Frankie Crosetti and Red Rolfe.

It is this Yankee power combined with the pitching of Gomez, Ruffing and Monte Pearson that has elevated the American eLaguers into prohibitive favoritism. On sheer percentage points, the Yankees are outhitting the Giants only slightly, but their penchant for pounding the ball into the seats has swayed the bettors.

Tabbed as "the team of destiny," following two sensational comebacks to win the National League pennants, during the past two seasons, the Giants deal with the rapier rather than the bludgeon of the Yankees. In Dick Bartell, Mel Ott, Burgess Whitehead, Jimmy Ripple, Harry Danning and Johnny McCarthy, they boast dangerous hitters who are not to be underrated, but the death-dealing home run is not essentially a part of their repertoire.

It is the probable superior defensive play of the Giants, combined with whatever Hubbell is able to accomplish against the Yankees' Murdereds' Row that gives Terry's team what the bettors call a look-in.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 5 (AP).—Carnegie Institute of Technology asked an apology today for the painting of the score of New York University's gridiron victory over Tech on the front of the pillared $6,000,000 Mellon Institute.

Clarence Overend, graduate manager of athletics at Tech, suggested in a letter to A. B. Dixon, N. Y. U.'s graduate manager of athletics, that the university's chancellor send the apology to Director Edwar Weidlein, of the research institute. He added:

"In addition he should assure Dr. Weidlein that N. Y. U. would pay the damages in full. It seems that the guilty should be expelled from school, but that is a matter for your own disciplinary agencies."

Police blamed pranksters for the 6-foot black letters, "N. Y. U., 18—C. T., 14," that have resisted attempts to remove them.

Poultices, scrubbing and steaming were tried without success. Sand blasting was rejected for fear it might injure the porous lime stone. Police Inspector J. L. Desay said it would cost $25,000 if the stone had to be replaced.

Eastern-Central Game Postponed

The opening interhigh school football series game scheduled yesterday between elevens from Central and Eastern, was postponed because of heavy rains. Weather and field conditions permitting, the game will be played this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, at Eastern stadium.

Georgetown Football Team,
Ryan Gymnasium,
City.

Dear Chums:

Kindly note I omitted the letter p, but you'd be surprised to know how many people around town are putting it in when they refer to you fellows. I can't say I blame them either.

ATCHISON.

For two years, now, we've been awaiting the football renaissance at Georgetown, and judging by your inauspicious debut against Shenandoah it looks very much like we'll be cooling our heels another year. What's the trouble, don't you want to play football?

Mind you, I'm not squawking about that 38-0 score. I don't say you should've knocked 'em off by a 60 or 80-0 count, when one touchdown is plenty. But I am complaining about the way you looked getting those points. Honestly, you looked 'like a bunch of grammar-school kids out for 10:30 a. m. recess. On second thought that may be stretching the point a bit. The kids seemed to have a lot more order and seemed to know what they were doing.

Tougher Games.

You can say it was the opening game and mistakes can happen, etc., but you can't explain that miserable performance so easily. How about the opening games of the other teams around here? All of 'em played tougher opponents than Shenandoah and while they made mistakes they still looked 100 per cent better than you. How do you explain that?

I've been watching you fellows for a number of years now and you haven't changed one iota. I've seen you get all het up over one game and not give a Hoya about the next. You look like national champions one week, and sandlot chumps the next. It's discouraging for your supporters, and isn't helping get the school back to the lofty heights it once attained. And after sifting the matter thoroughly I've arrived at the conclusion that you have only yourselves to blame.

Terps Would Win.

Why, Maryland, with only half as many players, could spot you fellows two touchdowns today and whip you by 14 points. Catholic University would have to use its second team, inexperienced as it is, to make the game halfway exciting, and I doubt seriously if George Washington even would play you. You may think that's rubbing it in, but it's gospel truth.

These teams, too, don't get half the treatment you fellows do. On trips you ride special trains. I've seen you sinking your fangs in nice, juicy steaks, lodging at the best hotels, going to movies and being entertained like royalty. Why? I don't know, never could figure it out, and probably never will. You've been getting back about 200 per cent more than you've been putting out for the school.

Good Coaching.

You get good coaching, which is something I should know about. I've been around these other schools, listening to the various coaches and Hagerty, Murtagh, Dubofsky and Barabas know what they're talking about. They should know how to block, how to take out a man, how to tackle. They've given you good plays, and I mean smart plays, but you don't seem able to do justice to them. What do you want them to do, play the game for you?

Well, this is getting longer than I expected. Give this matter serious consideration. Get wise to yourselves and let's have some of the football I know you're capable of. Start with Holy Cross Saturday and keep on going, and you'll find it will be worth while for yourselves the staff, the fans, and it'll give us sports writers something to write about. With all good wishes,

TONY ATCHISON.

Mrs. Page Moves Up In Tourney

Medalist Goes to 2d Round of Annual Women's Golf Play.

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 5.—Favorites of America's faminine golfing ranks, with glaring exceptions, advanced today in the first round of the forty-first annual scramble for the national championship.

Removed to the sidelines after the 18-hole eliminations were Miss Maureen Orcutt, of Haworth, N. J., runner-up a year ago to England's Pamela Barton, and Miss Clarrie Tiernan, the youthful Irish champion.

While these outstanding participants fell back such favored contenders as Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, medalist for two years handrunning; Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, six times winner of the crown; Marion Miley and Kathryn Hemphill, semifinalists in 1936, and Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, moved into the second round.

Mrs. George D. Brantley, of Jacksonville, Fla., who as Mary Rogers, was Southern champion in 1935, pulled the day's biggest surprise when she ousted Miss Orcutt, one up. Miss Tiernan, the New Jersey titleholder and Irish champion from Baltray, was beaten 5 and 4 by Mrs. William E. Shepherd, of Los Angeles.

Philadelphia's Mrs. Vare and South Carolina's Miss Hemphill needed all of their skill to survive the initial test. Mrs. Vare outlasted Dorothy Traung, of San Francisco, to win 2 and 1. Miss Hemphill, one of the stars of the winter circuit last season, got a hard-earned 2-and-1 victory over Helen Sigel, of Oreland, Pa.

Miss Miley, who could do no better than an 87 in qualifying, shot one under par golf for 14 holes to beat Virginia Fox, of Hershey, Pa., 6 and 4.

Youthful Miss Berg, the Minnesota school girl, matched par figures over 15 holes in turning back Mrs. Normal M. Lack, of Wilmington, Del., 4 and 3.

Mrs. Opal S. Hill, sharpshooting Kansas City delegate, took a 4-and-3 decision from Mrs. Burt Weil, of Cincinnati. Mrs. Hill's second-round opponent is the tournament's only other former champion, Marion Hollins, of Santa Cruz, Calif.

"For CHAMPIONSHIP PERFORMANCE in my car—I use Essolene!" SAYS WM. H. (BILL) TERRY

"As a baseball manager I've always got my eye peeled for the kind of players who will put our club out in front of the pennant race—and keep it there.

"It gets to be a habit. I find myself looking for these same championship qualities in everything I buy—especially gasoline. I want fast starting, instant response to my signals, smooth performance, and plenty of wallop. Essolene has all these—and gives me more miles to the gallon besides. I ought to know—I've used Essolene and Esso Motor Oil in my car for years!

"But there's one important difference between buying star ball players and gasoline. I always have to pay a premium to get an extra good player. With Essolene I get premium performance and extra good mileage without paying a cent more for it. That point alone scores a real hit with me."

Winners Pay Good Dividends

Former Brings $25.50, Latter Pays $70.10; 7,500 See Races.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 5.—Long shots dominated the running of the two sprint races that were outstanding on today's program. Fast Express, owned by Mrs. K. N. Gilpin, of Virginia, took the first of the two events and brought his backers a $25.50 mutuel, while Mattapony, the property of Howard Bruce, of Maryland, took the second at a $70.70 mutuel.

The races were run over a muddy track that resembled Louisville after the flood had receded, and through a steady rain. Despite racing conditions hardly fit for man or beast, 7,500 turf fans were in attendance.

Fast Express took his second purse of the Maryland season and his first in the silks of Mrs. Gilpin, who claimed him at Havre de Grace. Jockey Lou Machado, who rode Buck Langhorne to victory in yesterday's feature, had the mount and he tossed mud in the faces of Early Times and Rough Party.

Mattapony was in the thick of the battle from the start and, to the joy of her scattered backers, shook off early challenges of Honey Cloud and Likewise to take command. From that ponit to the finish line she was not menaced.

Mattapony brought Apprentice Jockey P. Ryan his first Maryland victory. Ryan, close to the top in the National Jockey rating, has been riding in sensational fashion in the Middle West.

Commission, owned and trained by J. Lowenstein, turned in the first win of his career in the first race. Ridden by Jockey G. Seabo, Commission hustled to the front at the break and was not seriously menaced thereafter. Spring Meadow followed the winner virtually all the way. Sortie's Son was third after getting off rather poorly. Commission paid $13.10.

Despite the fact that the steeplechase course was heavy and slippery, the bettors made Little Marty, a 10-year-old, a 1 to 2 favorite. The Lucky Hour gelding made good in a big way, winning by ten lengths. Long Shot was second ahead of Drill Master. William Jones, son of Trainer J. P. Jones, rode Little Marty, which paid more to place than to win, the payoff was $3.00 and $3.10.

The favorite players thought they were going to get less than even money on Autumnquest in the third race, but after the filly had scored a rather handy victory, a $5 mutuel was displayed. The high weight of the event, Autumnquest raced Joanny into defeat and went on to hold Nansemond safe.

The Liberty Lane's Durwack, at an $8.10 mutuel, led Zembla to the wire by a length in the sixth race. Palm Island was third in the group of a dozen platers operating over the mile and furlong course.

Droll Story, owned by H. P. Metcalf, won the day's finale at a $27 mutuel. Sallandry was second, beaten a neck, with Nancy Mae third. The seventh was taken by Glittering at a $15.60 mutuel.

A. G. Vanderbilt's Pit Bull, winner of Eastern Shore at Havre de Grace, but unplaced in Belmont Futurity, came down from New York to fulfill engagement in Richard Johnson Stakes on Saturday.

St. John's Team Back in Shape

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 5.—Probability that three of his regulars, who did not play in the game against Randolph-Macon or played only a few minutes, will return for the American University game in Washington Saturday, has cheered Coach Dutch Lentz enough to bring out the statement that St. John's had a 50-50 chance with the Eagles.

The casuals who are expected to be usable are Johnny Lambros, ace running and passing back; Stew Archie, guard, and Bernie Weisheit, end. The return of Labros will enable Lentz to start his first-string backfield of Lambros, MacMillen, Hammann and DeDisse.

Lentz, however, has a bad situation at the tackles, where, owing to the injuries to Frank Townsend and George Kopf, who are definitely out of the game, he has only Sprigg Sands and George Stallings. Should one of these be injured, Lentz could do nothing but shift a lineman from another place.

WITH BILL BENNINGS

Dear Al:

We probably have seen the Eton blue and brown of the C. V. Whitney Stable on the track for the last time. At Pimlico next month, the horses that Whitney has in training will be sold. Sonny Whitney says that he lacks time to participate in the sport. But to my way of thinking, he is just like the rest of us, he can't take it. When the stable left him by his father was rolling up purse after purse and stake after stake, when Equipoise and the others were in the limelight, young Whitney could be seen at the track apparently enthused about racing. When his thoroughbreds began to slip back among the also rans, Whitney's interest waned accordingly. And so the one stable that every one felt would always be an American turf fixture goes by the boards. It seems to be bunk about the tradition of the turf and keeping alive ope's colors. Fellows of the Whitney type like to see their colors in action, but it probably becomes monotonous when they are continually shunted into the discards. Of course that's a natural reaction. We wouldn't want to pitch horse shoes every day if we knew we could not win. Whitney will retain his breeding business. I wonder if another Top Flight wouldn't cause Whitney to vision a Derby, a Preakness and box seat in the club-house?

BILL.

First race—Could Be has some good races in the book and seems to have sought an auspicious spot in this field. I'm going to string along. Maxine is fairly consistent and is dangerous. Graeme Cracker, surprise winner at the Graw, is a possibility. Clocker Mike likes Heraldic.

Second race—True Tune should go well in this company. The off track will not hurt her chances. Tonianna and the heavily weighted Wrenace to take care of the others.

Third race—Fore, close in New York races, may take the chief portion of this purse. Needs only the right ride. By The Sword has worked well. Abbots Hour to hold the others safe.

Fourth race—Braving Danger has failed us twice, but this field is a different story. This is an in-and-outer, and I'm looking forward to one of the "in" days. Golden Vein is better than that recent sprint and is fit as hands can make a horse. Peppery was a tip last out.

Fifth race—Evening Tide whipped good ones last out and is at tops. Any price will be a good one. Wild Turkey might need a longer route, but is dangerous. Reminiscent for the show award.

Sixth race—Icy Wind may steal a lead on these and stay in front. Sun Asia is as good as those recent excellent efforts. Pompeius will like the going.

Seventh race—Church Call appears to be the class of this field. I'm tossing out those recent tries. Scudder is dropping down and may surprise. First Pigeon cannot be tossed out entirely.

Best bet—Evening Tide.

College Grid Teams Labor Despite Rain

Georgetown Scrimmages; Others Work Inside on Formations.

Rain was an unwelcome spectator in District college football camps yesterday, but failed to save the athletes from their daily dozen, albeit three schools remained indoors.

Georgetown, needing plenty of work and with little time to do it in, scrimmaged the freshmen in a torrential downpour at the Hilltop, acquitting itself in commendable style. Head Coach Jack Hagerty, however, is afraid the team will be poorly equipped to face Holy Cross' high-geared attack Saturday.

Catholic University's squad spent the afternoon indoors, running through dummy scrimmage against the freshmen who used La Salle plays, and brushing up on timing. "Fod" Cotton also put the linemen through their paces, including body contact in the workout. A section of 500 seats has been reserved for Cardinal supporters Sunday at Philadelphia, and requests for tickets at Brookland indicate that all will be used.

Maryland worked outdoors briefly, retiring indoors when the downpour started, to continue preparations for the Western Maryland game Saturday. The squad will be handicapped by the absence of Francis Beamer, reserve end, who broke a finger in the Penn game and will be out at least two weeks. Otherwise the same men who gave the Quakers a couple of long runs for their money last week will be ready for the Terrors.

Redskins EyeLead; Practice Blocking

With pleasant thoughts of holding undisputed possession of first place in the National Professional Football League—an accomplishment that can be realized by a victory over the Philadelphia Eagles, here, Sunday—Coach Ray Flaherty sent his Washington Redskins through a tough two-hour scrimmage yesterday at Griffith Stadium.

Aimed primarily at improving the Indians' defense of their punters, who have been harassed no end this season, Flaherty had his charges change positions frequently until not one defensive tackle or end, the chief trouble-makers, could reach the kicker.

Two blocked punts in the Brooklyn game last Sunday drew Flaherty's attention, and in hopes of a victory over the strong Eagles, he concentrated on defensive plays rather than offensive ones. Dixie Howell, still playing under wraps due to his water-on-the-knee in curred from a baseball spike wound, worked out and gave evidence that he may be able to start Sunday.

The opener marks the first time Gomez and Hubbel have opposed each other in the World Series They have not met under any circumstances in a mound duel since the 1934 all-star game at the Polo Grounds. That was the afternoon that Hubbell electrified one and all by striking out Ruth, Gehrig, Foxx, Simmons and Cronin in succession.

The only question about the way the teams will deploy tomorrow is whether George Selkirk or Myril Hoag, outfielders, will bat sixth. Selkirk normally is in the spot just behind DiMaggio, Gehrig and Dickey, the three big guns. As he (Selkirk) is a left-handed batsman, however, Manager McCarthy may choose to insert a starboard batsman, Hoag, and drop Selkirk to seventh place.

Against Gomez, the Giants will have big Mark Lieber, a right-handed batsman, in centerfield and the clean-up spot. Otherwise the National Leaguers will present the same line-up that boomed down the stretch to overhaul and beat the Chicago Cubs for the pennant. Hank Leiber got the call over Wally Berger because he is a better fielder. Lou Criozza, a converted infielder and a speed merchant, will be in center against right-handed pitching.

Like the Yankees, the Giants will have four southpaw hitters in their starting batting order. Jo-Jo Moore, Mel Ott, Jim Ripple and Jack McCarthy all hit from the port side. Last year Ripple was used only against right-handed pitching, but the read-headed replacement for Ott in rightfield has hit all kinds of hurling with such complete impartiality that he cannot be taken from the line-up.

The Giants haven't as many long-range guns as their rivals, but they figure to do much more damage with their bats than a year ago, when they were outhit as a team by 50 points. During the last six weeks, especially, the National League champions have set a lusty pace on the offense with six regulars batting from around .315 to .360. In home-run production, in either big league, they are excelled only by the Yankees.

Terry's troupe has been "hot" while the Yankees finished their season "cold." The mental or psychological angles are difficult to define or compare but most observers agree the Giants play more aggressive ball and are quicker to seize the breaks. The repeated ability of the Giants to come from behind and win, even when the situation appeared hopeless, has imbued the entire club with rare fighting spirit.

It remains to be seen whether the somewhat assorted but nevertheless vital assets of the National Leaguers can counterbalance the constant threat of a Yankee run-making deluge. If it has to rain, one side or the other will be satisfied to have it rain base hits.

The gates will open early in the morning, the game starts at 1:30 p. m. (E. S. T.), and national networks will broadcast the entire proceedings.

World Series Not New to 30 Players

Only 15 Men Are Inexperienced in Annual Fall Classic.

New York, Oct. 5.—For 30 of the 45 players of the New York Yankees and Giants the World Series starting tomorrow will be nothing new.

That number have had previous experience in baseball's annual fall classic. Fourteen of them have been in two or more previous series.

The "champions," from a standpoint of experience, will be, of course, Lou Gehrig and Tony Lazzeri, the Yanks' first and second basemen. Holdovers of the Ruthian heyday, they are appearing in their sixth series.

Pat Malone, veteran Yankee and Chicago Cubs relief pitcher, and Gus Mancuso, Giants' catcher, are next in line, each having been in three previous series. Ten others will be in their third classic this year.

Grains Follow Stocks to New Season's Lows

Wheat and Corn Reach Bottom Prices for the Year.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—Plunging downward 3 cents a bushel maximum, the Chicago wheat market today followed the lead of Liverpool wheat quotations and of securities at New York.

Corn paralleled the course of wheat, and in doing so reached all-around new low-price records for the season. Fast trading both in wheat and corn accompanied the fall of prices, with much of the selling apparently of a stop-loss character and coming from Eastern sources.

Liverpool cables said a renewal of pressure of wheat offerings from Russia largely accounted for tumbles of the Liverpool market. Liverpool wheat, December ⅜ to ¾ of a cent lower, closed today 3⅛ to 4⅛ cents down.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were 2⅝ to 2⅞ cents under yesterday's finish, December, 1.05@1.05⅛; May, 1.05⅞@1.06; July, 1.00⅝@1.00½. Corn, 1⅜ to 2¾ down; October, 66½; December, 61¼@61⅝; May, 62¾@62⅞. Oats, ⅜ to ¾ off; December, 30⅛@30¼. Rye showing 1¾ to 1⅞ drop; December, 77⅝. The outcome in provisions was unchanged to 32 cents lower.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, Oct. 5 (AP) (U. S. Dept. of Agr.). The wool market remained quiet today. Quotations on spot domestic wools were nominal unchanged from last week. Continued lack of interest from manufacturers for sizable quantities influenced most houses in withholding their wools. Occasional buyers with small orders were able to cover limited requirements at prices somewhat under the general level of quotations.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Drop to New Low Levels in Moderate Trading; Commodities Also Decline.

New York, Oct. 5.—Stocks had a bad day, and so did commodities, and the same conditions ruled in the London market. Stocks sold off steadily from start to finish but without much fuss or excitement. No rally took place, and considering the extent of the losses—fully as heavy as in any of the recent bad days—the sales volume was light. Turnover was around 1,600,000 shares. The price average for industrial shares and rail prices showed that all ground regained from the low prices of September 24 was given up. December wheat closed 2⅝ cents down, at 105⅛ cents a bushel.

Financial markets were not greatly impressed with the President's speech in Chicago in which a great deal of emphasis was placed on the dangers of anarchy spreading throughout the world. The danger may be there, all right, but business just now seems to think it had about all it could stomach last spring when the sit-down strikes were in full swing, and it rather would have seen the emphasis placed on the desirability of insistence upon law and order, to say nothing of individual rights, at home.

More Bad Medicine.

More than anything outside of business conditions, the prospect of an extra session of Congress was disliked by the markets; but the chief influence on prices no doubt continued to be the current recession in business activity and the anxiety over a possible further shrinkage of business profits. Even the so-called "experts" agree that business lacks that necessary ingredient called confidence, and it requires no brain truster to discover the reason for the lack. A prime reason for lack of confidence is the insistence of President Roosevelt on lifting costs. That is what the wages and hours bill and an unbalanced budget aim at.

Liquidation Continues.

Stocks were not active enough to suggest any large scale short selling or heavy liquidation, but they dribbled lower without much letup as one by one long holders yielded to the growing tendency to regard the next few months as more likely to bring business lower than to start much of a recovery. To general ideas on stock prices, bearish on balance, were added the selling influences of desire to register tax losses, scattered margin lightening, and to take precautions against further restrictions on stock trading by the new rulers of SEC and against a special session of Congress at which an attempt would be made to give business another bad turn.

Franc Declines.

More uncertainty crept into the United States bond market, possibly caused by the general uneasiness over stocks and the fact that the current discount bill award went at the highest rate paid in three weeks. Foreign finance was unsettled by a fresh decline in French currency, a monetary unit which now is regarded as certain to undergo further official valuation, with a possibility that such action will involve reconsideration of the dollar-pound relationship or at least threaten the stability of some other currencies.

All Groups Weak.

The outgoing tide of prices spared no group of stocks and few individual issues. Steel was the center of activity and it fell more than 5 points to a new low price below 73. Among other heavy losers were Westinghouse, Youngstown Steel, Deere, du Pont, Allied Chemical, United States Gypsum, Wheeling & Lake Erie, Case, Cerro de Pasco, B. M. T. preferred, National Steel, Sloss Sheffield, Safeway preferred, American Smelters, Crane, United Carbon, Crown Cork and Minneapolis Honeywell. The losses in that bunch ranged from 4 to 12 points. Mead preferred dropped 9 points. Steel and National Steel broke through their January low levels for the first time.

Leaders Hard Hit.

Metal shares averaged losses of more than 3 points. The worst prices of the year were shown for nearly all members of that division. Chemicals and farm implements, with several high-priced stocks, fell heavily, giving up 5 to 12 points. Rails sagged 1 to 3 points, as did motors, rail equipments, mail orders, rubbers, oils and utility shares. A similar range of loss was recorded in the tobacco and motor accessory sectors. Coca-Cola tumbled 10 points. Eastman Kodak dropped more than 8 points in a short time. Dealings were concentrated in Steel, Chrysler, Motors, Nickel, General Electric, New York Central, Republic Steel and a few others.

Economic Advice.

The SEC has abolished the office of economic adviser, filled since 1934 by Dr. Kemper Simpson. Out of his job with the SEC Dr. Simpson took a parting shot at the policies of the SEC, clearly enough because the SEC had not taken the advice of Dr. Simpson. All that can be dismissed as an inside squabble without significance. It may be noted in passing, nevertheless, that Dr. Simpson, in his criticism of the SEC, puts into sharp relief the fundamental difference in viewpoint of the New Dealer and that of the old-timer in American life, sometimes referred to as a rugged individualist.

Stock Values Slump 7 Billion in Month

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—The stock market's September slump clipped $7,589,880,000 from the value of shares listed on the New York Stock Exchange. This was revealed by the exchange in a compilation today showing on October 1 an aggregate value of 1,253 listed shares as $49,034,032,639, compared with $56,623,913,315 on September 1. The average price per share dropped to $35.07 from $40.51 on September 1. Stock exchange records disclosed the decline was the greatest since September, 1931, when share values slumped more than $12,000,000,000.

Loan Terms Steady Cotton

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—With hedge selling drying up, cotton held steady today in the face of weakness in stocks and other commodities. December reacted from 8.23 to 8.13 and closed at the low, with final prices 2 points net higher to 5 lower.

The market opened 4 to 11 points higher, influence by a constructive view of more liberal cotton loan terms for some lower grades announced by the Commodity Credit Corporation. Although initial gains attracted some liquidation, Southern offerings were light. Trade covering in September held that delivery steadier than the rest of the list.

Cottonseed Oil.

Cottonseed oil was easier today under renewed liquidation and increased Southern selling, promoted by weakness of grains and lard and the declines in the stock market. Final prices were 4 to 16 points net lower with sales of 160 contracts. Bleachable spot nominal. October closed 7.30; December, 7.23; January, 7.24; March, 7.29; May, 7.36.

Pit to Query Recent Squeeze Of Corn Shorts

Two Committees Will Investigate Trading in September Contracts.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—Kenneth S. Templeton, president of the Chicago Board of Trade, said tonight that directors had authorized the appointment of two special committees to investigate recent activities in September corn trading and cash and futures trading in all grains both before and after that month.

Action by the directors followed repeated meetings on the September corn "squeeze." Their order of September 25 suspended trading in September corn, and board members were requested to furnish the commodity exchange administration with names and addresses of all persons or firms having an open interest in corn for September delivery.

The appointment of committees was authorized under rule 156 of the board, providing for such action if the directors have reason to suspect any member has been guilty of an offense against the board. In two resolutions calling for appointment of the committees, the directors stated the board had reason to suspect such guilt.

Broad powers were conferred upon the investigating group by the resolution relating to cash and future trading in all grains before and after September.

It provided for investigation of "any and all matters pertinent to" grain trading, "spreading and hedging transactions in all grains" and "pit clearing house and private transactions in futures and cash grains."

Copper Price Cut To 12½c a Pound

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—The price of domestic copper was reduced ¼ cent a pound today by custom smelters. Falling back to 12½ cents a pound, the market yielded the ¼ cent advance yesterday. The reaction was attributed by metal circles to renewed weakness in the export market and curtailment of domestic buying following Monday's boost.

Primary producers were reported holding at 13 cents a pound, unchanged from early last week when they lowered the price 1 cent. The custom smelters made two cuts which lowered the market to 12 cents. But near the close of last week, they lifted the price to 12½ cents.

The Federal Diary

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

From the Civil Service Assembly of the United States and Canada, in session this week in Ottawa:

How personnel agencies, recently installed in the newer civil service setups, are solving their problems will be the basis for a panel, to be led by Dr. John M. Pfiffner, professor of public administration, University of Southern California.

Five States and more than a score of municipalities currently face the task of installing new public personnel agencies, the panel will be told. In Arkansas, Connecticut, Maine, Michigan and Tennessee new State-wide merit system laws approved by 1937 Legislatures are either already effective or about to become so—bringing the number of States under civil service provisions to 14.

Through July 1, civil service had been adopted for more than 30 municipal governments, wholly or in part, while three States—North Dakota, South Dakota and Kansas—passed enabling acts permitting cities to adopt the merit system by ordinance or public vote.

Says the Assembly: "No. 1 duty of the governments that are novices in civil service administration is to select a trained and experienced personnel director. Once in charge, the personnel chief, in turn, has a preliminary task in learning all that he can about the positions under his jurisdiction, State or city-wide.

"This information is usually gathered through a job-survey, such as has already been completed in Arkansas and Tennessee; from it a classification plan is made up, sorting positions into classes, according to their difficulty and responsibility so that equal pay for equal work may be established.

"A second task faced by the new personnel officer is to weed out present employes who are incompetent and to retain competent workers; also important to the success of the new public personnel installation, those experienced in the job emphasize here, is the education of department heads, employes and the public alike with respect to the value of the merit system."

"The messenger boys in room 1311, goaded to desperation by constant tales of the prowess of the Docket team keglers, reared up and challenged the veteran professionals to a match. The historic event has been staged, and by the justifiable handicap of 75 pins per team game, the lowly messengers humiliated the haughty sharpshooters, and today all is quiet along the I. C. C. front." Life is like that, not often enough but sometimes, say we, being glad to append the names of the Messenger Rookies and the names of the Docket Pros. The Messengers: Vaughan, Platner, Denton, Johnson and Barnardi. The Docket Pros: Pyles, Porter, Olson, Sutherland, Gross and Gist.

Now the I. D. R. A. bowlers. They play again tonight at the Columbia Alleys in one of the sessions that leads to a series ending on April 6. Matched tonight are General Land Office vs. Indian Bureau, Survey vs. Engineers, National Capital Parks vs. National Park Service, Buildings vs. Reclamation, and Administrative vs. the Secretary's Office. The other games have attracted big crowds of rooters. The ladies were especially noticeable among the enthusiasts by the sidelines.

Meetings announced by the National Federation of Federal Employes for this week are as follows: Wednesday, 6:30 p. m., Collectors' Dinner, Treasury Local 262, at the Y. W. C. A. Friday, Board of Representatives Local 2, 710 Fourteenth street northwest.

Agriculture announces the appointment of Harold L. Blakey, biologist in the Biological Survey, as a liaison officer between the Survey and the Forest Service to help develop plans for efficient management of wild life on Federal and State forest areas being improved under CCC activities.

Blakey succeeds Leo K. Couch, who now is directing the co-operative wild life research and management projects under Biological Survey supervision at nine land grant colleges and making research in forest wild life relationships.

It is interesting work that Blakey has performed. Since 1936 he has been studying the life history and habits of wild turkeys in Missouri for the Biological Survey and advising with the Forest Service and the Missouri State game and fish department on management practices for these birds.

Prior to joining the Survey Blakey was employed as a junior forester in the U. S. Forestry Service. After graduating from Central College, Fayette, Mo., in 1929, he spent a year and a half at the University of Missouri studying game management and later engaged in that work for the Missouri State game and fish department.

you are a serious-minded, conspicuous major appliance salesman, you have already given some serious thought to your prospects of earning a liberal income during the fall and winter months. Will it be by

1. Working as you have worked this summer?
2. Fall and winter canvassing?
3. Waiting for leads that, in most dealer organizations, are converted into "house sales"?
4. Riding the "mythical gravy train?"
5. Waiting on some display floor for drop-ins that do not drop in?
6. Associating yourself with a leader enjoying national prestige, where the subject of fall and winter income and sales has been built around a proven sales campaign that eliminates canvassing?

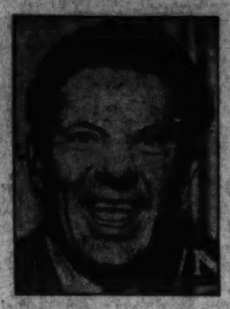
Bob Burns Says—



My Aunt Puney was a very nervous woman and she never did have much patience with Uncle Hink, but finally she got so bad Uncle Hink took her away on a vacation to the seashore.

The first night they got there, it was kinda windy, but they sat on the beach and Aunt Puney got to lookin' at the lighthouse 'way out in the bay. It was one of them lights that flash on and off every 30 seconds.

After she'd been lookin' at it for 15 minutes, she turned to Uncle Hink and says, "Well, Hink, I've learned my lesson in patience already—that wind has blown that light out 30 times and that fella just keeps lighting it again!"
